August 1985

MoMA TRIBUTE TO FIFTY YEARS OF WARNER BROS. CARTOONS OPENS WITH SPECIAL GUESTS MEL BLANC, FRIZ FRELENG, AND CHUCK JONES

The visual and vocal art that created such characters as Bugs Bunny and Daffy Duck will be honored at The Museum of Modern Art beginning September 13, 1985. In WARNER BROS. CARTOONS GOLDEN JUBILEE, an exhibition of cartoons that span the years between 1930 and the early 1960s, the Department of Film salutes a legacy of Looney Tunes and Merrie Melodies from Warner Bros.

Seventeen programs of 35mm prints of classic cartoons will be screened each weekend through January 26, 1986, in the Museum's Roy and Niuta Titus Theaters 1 and 2. Guest curator for the film exhibition is Leonard Maltin, author of two classic works on film animation and film critic for television's Entertainment Tonight. During the opening weekend of the series, Maltin will introduce guests of honor Friz Freleng and Chuck Jones, two innovative directors, and Mel Blanc, the voice of innumerable cartoon characters. The exhibition will also include the cartoons of Tex Avery, Bob Clampett, Robert McKimson, and Frank Tashlin, colleagues at Warner Bros.' animation studio "Termite Terrace."

Concurrent with the film series, the Museum will mount an exhibition of original Warner Bros. animation art, "THAT'S <sup>NOT</sup> ALL FOLKS!," in the lobby gallery of Titus Theater 1. On display will be background paintings, drawings, animation cels, and a video installation containing cartoon clips and interviews with some of the Warner Bros. directors. Co-organized by Mary Corliss, assistant curator in the Department of Film, and Steve Schneider, a film writer and expert on Warner

Bros. animation, the wall exhibition consists primarily of artwork on loan from Schneider's personal collection.

Maltin states, "The creators of these shorts had incredible freedom, much more than their counterparts in live-action films. The result is an explosion of original ideas. What's more, the directors were able to put their individual stamps on each cartoon. Any animation buff can distinguish a Chuck Jones cartoon from a Friz Freleng or a Bob Clampett. Few feature-film directors could pass the same test." Freleng produced and directed over 300 cartoons while at Warner Bros. from 1930 until the closing of its animation department in 1963. Such characters as Porky Pig, Yosemite Sam, and Sylvester the Cat first appeared in his cartoons. Jones, who worked for animator Ub Iwerks and then producer Leon Schlesinger until the latter sold his studio to Warner Bros., originated such characters as Road Runner, Wile E. Coyote, and Pepe Le Pew. Following ten years of radio work, Blanc began his career as the voice of countless animated characters in 1937. He originated the streetwise New York voice of Bugs Bunny, as well as those of such characters as Porky Pig, Sylvester the Cat, Tweety, Pepe Le Pew, and Yosemite Sam.

The programs in the film series, each of which contains six to eight cartoons, are organized in ways that reveal the talents of individual animators (Freleng, Jones, Clampett, McKimson, Avery); the variety, topicality, and sophistication of themes (the war effort, show business); and the process of animation and evolution of characters (Elmer Fudd, Bugs Bunny).

The exhibition coincides with the return of the classic Warner Bros. cartoons to the ABC Television Network. Beginning September 7, 8:00-9:00 a.m., The Bugs Bunny Looney Tunes Comedy Hour will air regularly as part of ABC's Saturday Morning children's schedule. The Bugs Bunny cartoons originally premiered on the network in 1960 and were presented at various times until 1975.
