"And can we remain insensitive to the frenzied activities of great capital cities, the new psychology of night life, to the hectic figures of the viveur, the cocotte, the apache and the alcoholic?"---Manifesto of the Futurist Painters, Milan, 11 February, 1910.

"Everything is moving, everything is running, everything is whirling. A figure never stands passively before us, but appears and disappears constantly....

"Movement and light destroy the substance of objects....

"...Painters have always shown us figures and objects arranged in front of us. We are going to put the spectator at the center of the picture." ---Technical Manifesto of Futurist Painting, Milan, 1911.

One of the most famous early paintings by the leading Futurist artist, Boccioni's Laugh was first shown in Milan in 1911. There it was slashed by an outraged "spectator" but repainted by Boccioni in time for the famous Futurist Exhibition shown first in Paris, February 1912, and thereafter in London, Berlin (where it was sold), Brussels, Amsterdam, Hamburg, Munich, Vienna, Budapest, Zurich and six other cities.

Note: Denis studied and championed Gauguin's ideas about 1890 and later, with Vuillard and Bonnard, helped form the Nabi group. He was one of the best French art critics of his generation. The Pitcher seems to anticipate Braque's cubist textures and the clear, flat silhouettes of the pitchers and jugs in Ozenfant's "Purist" still lifes of 1920.

Girl with Bare Shoulders. (c.1920?) Oil on canvas, 17 1/8 x 10 1/4". A. Conger Goodyear Fund. 124.58

Note: Gwen John was the older sister of the much more famous Augustus John who generously, and perhaps rightly, called her the better artist. She studied at the Slade School in London in the late nineties, then with Whistler in Paris. She became a close friend of Rodin and posed for the figure in his ill-starred monument to Whistler. She was a devoted friend of the poet, Rilke, and later she came to know the great New York collector, John Quinn, who bought many of her paintings. Her art, like her character, was reticent but intense.

Note: Iataster was a friend and fellow student of the slightly younger and better-known Karel Appel. When Appel left for Paris in 1950, Lataster remained in Amsterdam. In Threatened Game a child at the right holds a ball above his head as he tumbles backward from the red flame and black smoke of a bomb.

Claude MONET. French, 1840-1926.

Water Lilies. (c. 1920) Oil on canvas in triptych form, each section 6 1/2 feet high x 14 feet long. Mrs. Simon Guggenheim Fund. 666.59.1-3.

Note: Painted in the artist's studio at Giverny about 1920 this 42-foot composition is one of a series of murals inspired by the artist's garden. Monet was eighty years old at the time.

In the Museum's Water Lilies the reflections of sky, clouds and foliage mingle with flowers and mist. These floating ambiguous images and the flat, steeply rising perspective tend to give the scene an unreal or abstract effect. At the same time Monet has given emphatic reality to the painted surface by means of broad sweeping brush strokes combined with a many-layered, scraped and scumbled technique of extraordinary richness.

These qualities together with the large scale are among the factors which in recent years have made Monet's late work important to the abstract painters of our mid-century.

Yet in spite of the quasi-abstract effect of the Water Lilies mural Monet always remained essentially an Impressionist in his dependence upon nature. The Water Lilies are indeed the culmination of Impressionism but they transcend the essentially intimate, casual and everyday spirit of Impressionism. The Water Lilies seem symphonic in their grandeur of scale, their breadth of vision and their glory of color.

A similar triptych forms part of the enormous panorama of the same subject installed in the two great oval rooms in the Orangerie gallery in Paris. Except for the Orangerie series the Museum's triptych is the largest mural painting by Monet. The triptych was slightly damaged during a bombardment of Giverny in 1944 but very little of the original paint was lost.

Note: Rock Drawing is one of many similar pieces made as studies while the artist was working on the large construction The Rape of Lucrece, now on view in the stair tower at the extreme northeast corner of the ground floor.

✓ Burning Bush. 1959. Oil on canvas, 63 x 48". Larry Aldrich Foundation Fund. 612.59.

Medardo ROSSO. Italian, 1858-1928.

The Bookmaker. (1894) Wax over plaster, 17 7/8" high. Acquired through the Lillie P. Bliss Bequest. 673.59.

Note: Medardo Rosso, Italian by birth and training, was perhaps the most advanced sculptor working in Paris during the 1880's and 1890's. He was known and admired by Zola, Degas, Rodin and other leaders. His friendship with Rodin led to their exchange of sculptures.

The Bookmaker is perhaps his most original single figure though it was surpassed in boldness by some of his portraits and groups. The Bookmaker, done in 1894, is said to have influenced the striking backward-slanting stance of Rodin's great figure of Balzac of 1897, a cast of which is in the Museum Garden.

Note: This head is a detail of a design for a C.I.O. poster. An earlier version of a prisoner behind barbed wire was painted for the Office of War Information in 1943. Questioned as to the painting's significance, Shahn answered: "Man as long as he lasts on this earth (if he remains at all) will always be of interest to the student of the present and the future (if there be one)."
