Library of Congress Catalogue Card Number 61-16521

While this catalogue cannot pretend to list all of Boccioni's existing graphic works, it does include a large part of them, sufficient to draw a reasonably precise notion of his development and the chronology of his stylistically varied oeuvre.

In general the drawings and prints have been listed in chronological order, although when it has seemed more useful, related drawings have been grouped together. The many studies of horses, city buildings, crowds, for example, have been so grouped, even though the drawings might have been done over a period of two, or even three, years.

Especially in the early drawings, establishing a strict chronology is not easy. Boccioni worked in several manners at the same period, treated similar subjects over a long period of time, and rarely dated his studies. Furthermore, the exact chronology of his paintings, few of which are dated, has remained a disputed problem. But examination of so large a group of drawings has made certain broad tendencies quite clear and has afforded a rather more detailed picture of Boccioni's early development than previously has been possible. From 1910, when the bold "Futurist" manner takes over, dating is less difficult. But this period, too, is not without its problems; Boccioni was at no time content to settle on a single way of working.

The largest single group of drawings, and all of the prints here catalogued, are from the collection of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lewis Winston of Birmingham, Michigan. Most of these had remained until recently in the possession of Boccioni's sister, Sra. Raffaella Callegari-Boccioni of Verona, from whom they were acquired. All works in the catalogue for which no other owner is specified are from the Winston Collection. When photographs exist of these works, the negative number appears in parentheses, e.g. (W-X23). The photographs were made by Mr. Niel Priessman and Mr. Lewis Gilcrest.

The next largest collection of drawings is in the Raccolta delle Stampe A. Bertarelli, Milan. For these drawings the archive number has been included in parentheses.

I am indebted to many persons for aid in compiling this catalogue. First of all Mr. and Mrs. Winston must be cited not only for their patient assistance in preparing this work, but for the devotion they have shown in caring so magnificently for their large and important collection of Boccioni drawings. Much of the technical chore of measuring and describing the drawings fell to Alan M. Fern to whom I am most grateful. A part of the Winston Collection was exhibited at the Art Institute of Chicago in March and April, 1958, and the catalogue prepared at that time by Hugh Edwards, Elaine Johnson, and Eileen O'Leary has proved useful. Wherever possible the descriptions from that catalogue have been included unchanged. Dr. Paolo Arrigoni, Direttore delle Civiche Raccolte d'Arte, Milan, has been most helpful in furnishing descriptive material on the drawings from the Raccolta Bertarelli. Many private collectors, too, have been especially helpful in their prompt replies to my queries, particularly Dr. Jucker and Dr. Mattioli of Milan, Sra. Margherita Sarfatti, and the always helpful Sra. Benedetta Marinetti of Rome. In some few cases I have been unable to see the drawings or adequate photographs, and have had to depend on earlier catalogue listings. Such drawings are so indicated.

UMBERTO BOCCIONI

Regardless of the style he might adopt or the temporary goal he set himself, Umberto Boccioni embraced his art with an intensity and passion that mark it as the product of a profoundly dedicated man. There is no phase in the work of his brief career that can be called capricious or dilettante: every step of the way was marked by a serious, almost compulsive, desire to investigate and elucidate his every reaction, searching for individual purpose in an impersonal world. His was a romantic personality obsessed with itself yet irresistibly attracted to the coursing industrial world in which self is overwhelmed by violence and the relentless impartiality of modern progress. Torn between contemplation and action, he did not in his short life fix upon a single goal for his art. He insisted only that it be intense, that it possess the entire being of both artist and observer. Nowhere can Boccioni's restless search for this artistic intensity be seen more clearly than in his drawings.

Umberto Boccioni was born in Reggio Calabria of parents from the Romagna on October 19, 1882. The family moved to Forlì, Genoa and finally Padua, where his mother and sister remained; Umberto accompanied his father to Catania where he attended school. Because of his father's opposition to his interests in literature and art, Boccioni, having finished school, settled in Rome in 1898 with the family of his father's sister. There he attended drawing classes and eventually met and studied with Giacomo Balla who returned to Rome in 1900 after several months in Paris studying the works of the Neo-Impressionists. Under Balla Boccioni began his serious dedication to painting.

In 1902, having won a prize in the exhibition at Rome, Boccioni paid a visit of some months to Paris, to judge for himself the modern currents in art. Only one drawing (no. 1) gives a clue to his work at this time: a melancholy study of a pensive young man, possibly the artist himself, looking out over the twilight landscape. In 1904 Boccioni again set out for foreign parts, accompanying a family he had met in Paris to Russia where he spent some months as tutor.

It is only from 1906, however, that we can trace the consistent development of Boccioni's work. Having settled in Padua with his mother and his sister Raffaella who, with his friend Ines, were to remain his most frequent models, he set about perfecting his careful technique of drawing. In the winter of 1906-7 he attended life classes at the Venice academy (possibly nos. 24-29 are from this period, if not before), and made many studies of Venice and the countryside. He also began to work in etching, using the same careful, clean linear style as in his drawing (nos. 297-301).

Busy Milan with its moving crowds and rumbling trams attracted him more than peaceful Venice, however, as he confided to his diary in 1907, and his trips to the city were climaxed by his moving there with his mother and sister in 1908. But the attraction of Milan, the modern metropolis, carried with it a note of anguish and pain. Blessed Solitude, Only Blessedness he captioned a complex allegorical drawing begun in 1907 in which a pensive robed figure floats in melancholy detachment over the turmoil of the city (no. 17). Sensual love, in a personification centering on the ample nude figure of a jewel-bedecked prostitute drawn in the manner of von Stuck, is contrasted with a Pre-Raphaelite personification of romantic love; a regiment of nuns and clerics contrasts with masses of urban workers shown against the smoky confusion of the city with its dray horses, factories, and clanging trams. Across the center of this representation of urban humanity passes the grinning figure of death, depicted in a fashion recalling Felicien Rops. No aspect of the city is condemned more than another; the only solution to the baseness of modern life seems to be withdrawal. Boccioni is repeating, in other words, the fashionable pessimism inherited from the end of the century and perpetuated by such artists as Rops, de Groux, and the popular von Stuck.

A similar anguish is expressed in the various studies for a pathetic painting of fateful love, eventually realized in the painting called The Dream: Paolo and Francesca (nos. 36-39). This pathos of isolation and frustration is suggested in many works: The Story of a Seamstress (nos. 30-35), some studies of crowds preliminary to The City Rises (nos. 153-154, 163, 163a), Mourning (nos. 165-169), and finally in Boccioni's Futurist masterpiece, the triptych States of Mind. Again the theme of fate and human suffering is expressed in the drawing, Allegory of the Nativity, reproduced in the Christmas number of Illustrazione Italiana, 1908 (no. 60). In his early years in Milan, struggling to earn a meagre living by drawing illustrations for this and other magazines (see nos. 53-58), Boccioni doubtless sensed this generalized pessimism in very personal terms.

From 1909 on, Boccioni adopts a more positive attitude towards the city and ceases to moralize about its vices and loneliness. His many studies of urban types probably date chiefly from 1909 and 1910, although some appear in his paintings as early as 1908. Work horses, men walking and loitering in the street, buildings under construction which offered unusual forms when seen against the light (note nos. 108-112) filled his sketches. It was early in 1909, too, that he met Marinetti, who published his inflammatory manifesto of Futurism in February of that year, and began to frequent the Famiglia Artistica, a Milanese society of artists and patrons. He now felt himself to be a Futurist and with Carrà, Russolo, and other painter friends joined Marinetti's circle, but he did not at once find visual meaning in the term.

Towards the end of 1909, Boccioni's linear drawing style with its lingering reflections of Art Nouveau begins to give way to a broader treatment more allied to his interest in Neo-Impressionism. Shattering planes of light begin to dominate the forms. He begins to play with tones organized in broad areas, and to be more conscious of the qualities of the medium itself for achieving effects. The etchings from 1910, for example (nos. 313-315) have a visual richness not evident before. The self-realization taught by Futurism was becoming evident first in technique.

In February 1910, the manifesto of the Futurist painters, largely written by Boccioni, was published, and was followed in March by the more explicit "technical" manifesto. In March, too, Boccioni and others allied with Futurism were represented in an exhibition of prints and drawings at the Famiglia Artistica. Probably few if any of the etchings were made after this date because Boccioni now gave his attention to creating paintings worthy of the assertive Futurist manifestoes. Although his exhibition of forty-two works at the Ca'Pesaro, Venice, in July 1910, was heralded as Futurist by Marinetti, it belonged more to the past than to the future. But during this very month Boccioni began to put his scattered records of city life together to create a great Futurist hymn to labor and in so doing evolve for himself certain principles of formal expression that released him entirely from the bonds of his former manner. This process can be followed step by step in the series of studies in which a single huge horse gradually takes over the composition to become, not just a spirited animal, but a symbol of the overwhelming force of the surging metropolis (161, 162, 164). The descriptive picture Labor (as it was first called) became the evocative painting The City Rises.

Following his newly realized concept of embodying expression in the forms themselves, Boccioni created two contrasting pictures. The first of these, Mourning, gave him the opportunity to consider the difference between the picture of a person expressing a feeling, and the direct expression of feeling through pictorial forms. With the prints of Edvard Munch as encouragement, he experimented with both composition and facial forms (nos. 165-169). To express an opposite kind of feeling he created a rolling, jovial composition for the painting, The Laugh (or Laughter). The painting itself had later to be redone because the first version was damaged, so the preliminary drawings are our only key to its original state (nos. 171-174).

After the exhibition in Milan featuring Futurist paintings, opening April 30, 1911, at which these and other works were shown, Boccioni moved in a still bolder direction. One series of drawings was the outcome of his earlier studies of the shattering qualities of light, his interest in the complexity of the perception in which objects seen, noises heard, and happenings remembered fuse. His study of Ines (no. 184), which clearly indicates that Boccioni had now seen reproductions of recent cubist painting, is a notable example. Another very different series is related to his desire to express "states of mind" through form. "I have painted two pictures," Apollinaire quoted him as saying, "one expressing departure and the other arrival. . . . To mark the difference in feeling I have not used in my painting of arrival a single line used in the painting of departure." From this simple idea grew his fine triptych, States of Mind: The Farewells; Those who Stay; Those who Go. But the studies for the paintings record an abrupt change in his thinking, for in the autumn of 1911 Boccioni made a brief trip to Paris where he met Picasso and saw much cubist painting. Not that the concept changed; but cubist forms now helped Boccioni free himself of the last traces of Art Nouveau willowness and impressionist vagueness (nos. 192-201).

A further step towards the dissolution of concrete objects in the creation of positive, evocative form, comes after the important exhibition of Futurist painting at the gallery of Bernheim-Jeune in Paris, February 1912. Boccioni, in Paris for the exhibition (he also accompanied the paintings to London and Berlin) toyed with an almost geometrical analytical procedure (nos. 217-219). The interplay of light and positive form creates a new, rather harsh, sense of dynamic activity. And now, filled with the urge to construct complex forms in space and light, he turned to sculpture (nos. 220-226). As usual, he prefaced his new activity with a manifesto quite remarkable in statement, published on April 11, 1912.

Rigid, architectonic construction could not hold Boccioni's ranging interest for long and by mid-1912 he was beginning to weave the planes released by light into lyrical movements in space (nos. 229-231). He wished, he said, to find a form that would be like a remembered motion, the product of time but permanent in space. He began a series of drawings of football players and striding male nudes which complement his rapidly developing sculpture (nos. 233-256). Some he labeled "I want to fix human forms in motion"; others "I want to synthesize the unique forms of continuity in space." This last was the title of his final sculpture in the series, made early in 1913, one of the great modern works in sculpture (nos. 236-237).

Boccioni's concern for making permanent in a "unique form" the changing image of the world as viewed in Bergsonian terms, is evident in titles for other drawings shown with his sculpture in Paris and Rome in 1913: "I want to present the fusion of a head with its environment" (nos. 224-226), "I want to present the prolongation of objects in space" (no. 219), and "I want to model light and atmosphere."

How far Boccioni had traveled in his ideas about art in the space of three or four years can be judged by comparing studies for The Cyclist (nos. 257-264) with those for The City Rises. He now moves quickly and deliberately away from the forms that identify the object, to try out different ways in which the viewer may be caught up in the driving motion of the simplified forms. Similarly, the barbed and angular forms in the studies of galloping horses fused with houses (nos. 272-277) indicate that by late 1913 and early 1914 he was far more concerned with evolving a synthesized, persuasively dynamic structure than imitating effects of light or projecting personal pathos or social commentary. From these drawings he evolved a work of sculpture in wood, cardboard, and metal, emphasizing only the purely structural dynamism of the original image.

It was probably in 1914 that he turned once again to cubism for inspiration, but now his forms had greater strength, the rhythms more determined motion (nos. 266-269). The complexity and frenzy of earlier works were sobered by a new sense of unity and a suggestion of monumentality. From these harshly delineated, twisted forms recalling Picasso's Demoiselles d'Avignon, he moved gradually towards a more Cézanne-like structure in which mass and coherent volume evolve from the flux of shifting planes (nos. 287-292).

When war broke out in 1914, the Futurists were overjoyed for they had exalted the impersonal efficiency of war from the time of Marinetti's first manifesto. Boccioni joined Marinetti in campaigning for Italy's intervention on the side of the Allies, putting the inflammatory Futurist techniques at the service of politics rather than art. Shortly after Italy did enter the war, in April 1915, the Futurists volunteered for service. In July Boccioni entered the army as a volunteer with Marinetti, Sant'Elia, and Russolo.

Released on leave from the army some months later, Boccioni again began to paint. His vision was much changed: the suggestions of Cézanne-like monumentality now became openly declared principles (nos. 293-296). When he set out to paint the portrait of the musician Ferruccio Busoni in June 1916, he constructed a great simple composition, rich in color and massive in form. He looked ironically on the late arrivals to Futurism who, as he wrote to his friend the composer Pratella, seem to "latch onto the ideas, leap astride them and ride at break-neck speed, ruining them . . ." Pushing aside the manifestoes and turmoils of his recent years, he could now write to Walden, "Only art exists."

During the summer of 1916 Boccioni was called back into service, assigned to a cavalry unit near Verona. There, on August 16, he was knocked from a horse in a riding accident and died the next morning.

In the brief span of some ten years Boccioni had explored an astonishing range of artistic experiences. He extracted himself from a self-conscious state of despair to lose himself in breathless activity, seeking to transcend materiality in an ecstasy of action. Then, sobered by the very force he had extolled, he found satisfaction in an art that borrowed neither from psychological shock nor social persuasion. "... it is a terrible burden," he wrote, "to have to work over within one's self a whole century of painting." But in the struggle, at once painful and exalting, he created some of the most forceful and exhilarating works of modern times.

DRAWINGS

Note: Dimensions are given in inches; height precedes width. The negative number when preceded by a W, i.e. (W-000) refers to a work in the Winston Collection. The works marked with an asterisk were in the exhibition of Boccioni's graphic work held during 1961-62 at The Museum of Modern Art, New York, The Detroit Institute of Arts, and the Los Angeles County Museum.

11* STUDY OF A BULL'S BODY (1907-8).

Pencil on white wove (discolored), $4\frac{1}{2} \times 6\frac{1}{8}$, signed lower center: UB (partially erased); lower right: Boccioni. (W-X4)
Verso: STUDY OF A BULL'S FORELEGS (1907-8). Pencil, unsigned.

12* STUDY OF A BULL'S FORELEGS (1907-8).

Pencil on white laid (discolored), $5\frac{1}{4} \times 4$, signed lower right: UB (partially erased) Boccioni. (W-X5)
Verso: SKETCH OF A BULL'S HEAD (1907-8). Pencil, unsigned.

13* PIANIST AND LISTENER (ca.1907).

Pen and brush with black ink, $7 \times 7\frac{1}{4}$, signed lower left (in pencil): Boccioni. (W-162)

14* BUST OF A MAN; STUDY FOR "PIANIST AND LISTENER" (ca. 1907).

Pencil, pen and black ink on buff wove, $3\frac{3}{4} \times 5\frac{3}{8}$, signed lower right: Boccioni. (W-193)

15* HOMAGE TO MOTHER (Veneriamo La Madre) (1907).

Pencil on ivory wove, folded along the sections of the composition, smears of blue and orange paint below the right portion of the drawing, $15\frac{3}{8} \times 22\frac{3}{4}$, signed lower right center: Umberto Boccioni. The studies for this triptych, which was never executed, were shown in the retrospective exhibition in Milan, 1916-17. A small oil study exists in the Marzotto Collection, Milan. Measurements are noted above and below each section as follows: left, m. 0.85; center, m. 1.35; right, 0.85. (W-129)

16 BOCCIONI'S SISTER WORKING, 1907.

Pastel, $24\frac{1}{2} \times 17\frac{3}{8}$, signed lower right: U. Boccioni / Settembre 907.
Collection Sra. Callegari-Boccioni, Verona.

17 BLESSED SOLITUDE, THE ONLY BLESSEDNESS (Beata Solitudo, Sola Beatitudo), 1907-8.

Pen and ink on white paper, $29\frac{1}{2} \times 19\frac{1}{4}$, signed upper left: Boccioni; dated upper right: Milano A. MCMVIII. The date 1907 is entered at the lower right.
Collection Sra. Callegari-Boccioni, Verona.

18 STUDY FOR "BEATA SOLITUDO," 1907.

Pencil on brown wove with blue-grey thread, $13\frac{1}{2} \times 8\frac{1}{4}$, signed and dated lower right: Umberto Boccioni / 907. (W-203)
Verso: SUMMARY SKETCHES (evidently cut from a larger sheet) (1907). Pencil, unsigned.

19* WOMAN RESTING HER CHIN ON HER HAND (1907).

Pencil, with graffiti in pen and India ink, on white wove, $7\frac{3}{8} \times 4\frac{3}{8}$, signed lower right: U Boccioni. See no. 18. (W-X73E)

20 MACABRE ALLEGORY (1907).

Pencil on white paper, $7\frac{1}{2} \times 9\frac{1}{8}$, signed lower right: Umberto Boccioni. This is a study for "Beata Solitudo" (see no. 17).
Raccolta Bertarelli, Milan. (B-318/834)

21 SHEET OF STUDIES WITH MALE NUDE FROM THE BACK (1907).

Pencil on ivory wove, $10 \times 8\frac{1}{2}$, signed lower right: Boccioni. This is a study for "Beata Solitudo." (W-136)
Verso: STUDY OF MALE NUDE (same pose as recto) (1907). Pencil, unsigned.

22* STANDING NUDE GIRL (1907).

Soft pencil on ivory bristol board, $16\frac{1}{8} \times 7$, signed lower right: Umberto Boccioni. This is possibly a study for "The Dream" (see no. 39). (W-130)

23* STUDY OF AN ARM WITH HAND RESTING ON THE SHOULDER (1907).

Pencil on white wove, $9\frac{7}{8} \times 5\frac{3}{4}$, signed lower right: Umberto Boccioni. This is a detail study related to no. 22. (W-X63)

24* STUDY OF HANDS (ca.1907).

Pencil on rough white wove, $12\frac{1}{2} \times 14$, signed lower right: Boccioni; upper right: UB partially erased. (W-140)

Verso: STUDY OF A SHOULDER, AND A FORE-ARM AND HAND. Pencil, signed lower right: UB.

25 STUDY OF TWO HANDS AND FOREARMS (ca.1907).

Pencil on buff wove, $5\frac{7}{8} \times 9\frac{7}{8}$, signed lower right: U Boccioni. (W-X35)

26 STUDY OF THE ARM AND SHOULDER OF A WOMAN (1907-8).

Pencil on buff wove, $8\frac{1}{8} \times 11\frac{3}{8}$, signed lower right: U Boccioni (erased). (W-201)

27* STUDY OF MAN'S FOREARM (ca. 1907).

Pencil on buff laid, $8\frac{1}{4} \times 11\frac{3}{8}$, signed lower right: Umberto Boccioni. (W-137)

Verso: STUDY OF EXTENDED ARMS WITH HANDS CLASPED. Pencil, unsigned.

28 STUDY OF A FOOT (ca.1907).

Pencil on white wove, 6 $\frac{1}{8}$ x 7 $\frac{3}{8}$, signed lower right: Boccioni (lower left UB erased). (W-146)
Verso: STUDY OF A LOWER LEG AND FOOT. Pencil, unsigned.

29 STUDY OF A KNEE (ca.1907).

Pencil on white wove (discolored), 8 $\frac{3}{8}$ x 6 $\frac{1}{4}$, signed lower left: UB (on side). (W-145)
Verso: STUDY OF FEET. Pencil, unsigned.
