Philip Johnson, director of the international architectural exhibition now being held at the Museum of Modern Art, will address a group of interior decorators of this city at a conference in the Museum's galleries on Monday evening, March 14, at 8:30 o'clock. He will speak on "Interior Decoration vs. Interior Architecture," using the models and enlarged photographs in the exhibition to illustrate his talk. The lecture will be followed by discussion. Those who have been invited to attend are members of the Decorators Club, the Society of Interior Decorators and the New York chapter of the American Institute of Interior Decorators.

This lecture is one of a series which have been given at the Museum in connection with the architectural exhibition. The exhibition continues at the Museum through March 23 and will then begin a three-year tour of the United States, starting at the Pennsylvania Art Museum.
