MUSEUM OF MODERN ART • NEW YORK
MEMORIAL TO LIZZIE P. BLISS

The life of Lizzie P. Bliss was one of service and of joy in that service. To individuals and to public movements she gave continually of her support and aid. In this city she held a unique place, enjoying the affection and devotion of all who knew her and of many who knew only her name. It was her delight and privilege to give to the artist and musician of promise the support that their ultimate success so generally justified. Many public enterprises owed much to her leadership and devotion. The Kneisel Quartet, the Juilliard Foundation, the great Armory Exhibition of 1913, were among the undertakings which profited by her direction and support.

During the last two years of her life, the Museum of Modern Art was her chief interest. A founder of the Museum and its Vice-President, she had a principal part in its establishment and in the conduct of its activities. Her splendid legacy of paintings, drawings and prints, at once gives the Museum a high place among public institutions with similar purposes.

The collection which she formed bears the hall-mark of her unerring taste and fine courage. Her early interest in modern art continued unfaltering and unabated through years of public indifference. She had the vision and the knowledge to sense the best. Nothing could find a permanent place on the walls of her gallery that did not stand the test imposed by the masterpieces that already hung there.

The greater part of this collection Miss Bliss bequeathed to the Museum of Modern Art under the sole condition that the Museum shall become in fact what it is in name.

The Trustees here record their deep appreciation of a legacy so generous that it will serve as an inspiration in carrying forward their plans for the development of the Museum in which Miss Bliss was so deeply interested.

The delight of association with her, the quality of her character, will remain always in our memory. We have lost a friend and a woman great in her generation.

To attempt in any way through the medium of words to convey an appreciation of Miss Bliss and her personality is to feel immediately a restraining hand upon one’s arm, for she was by instinct profoundly reticent, shy without being self-conscious; a believer in action rather than words. But it is interesting to know what manner of woman it was who laid the cornerstone of a Museum of Modern Art, with such vision, constructive leadership and a splendid legacy of exceptionally beautiful paintings, drawings and prints.

She was born in Boston. Her mother being somewhat delicate she acted as hostess for her father during his official life in Washington as a member of the McKinley cabinet. While her parents lived she had no life outside theirs; no thought but complete devotion to their well-being. She inherited her mother’s fine taste for music, and was an original supporter and prime mover in the national organization of the Kneisel Quartet which gave pleasure to so many people throughout the country during its years of successful life. She played the piano well enough to have been a professional, but shied from the public performance. After her mother’s death she ceased to play herself, but was always an appreciative listener, and gave liberally of her means and personal encouragement to any number of young artists struggling up the ladder of fame.

The person who most influenced her life in the field of painting was undoubtedly Arthur B. Davies. Impressed by his genius she purchased first one painting, then several, then almost anything obtainable, from drawing to large canvas, as he finished it. He led the way to exhibitions, talked painting to her, modern methods, plans for future work, and found a willing listener, disciple and patron. She broadened his horizon and revealed to him the rhythm of sound as he unfolded for her the rhythm of color and form. Assisted by Davies’s knowledge and inspired by his dreams her delicate intuitive love of beauty developed rapidly.

Loyalty was as natural to her as life itself, and she was an advocate for modern art when it had few admirers, a patron when it had almost no market; finally through her keen intelligence, valiant championing of young artists, and her personal experience with their work, she became not only an important collector but one of the best judges of contemporary painting in this country. To gather that which has stood the test of time takes skill and taste, but to select wisely from... the vast amount of unweeded material produced by contemporary artists, requires taste, courage, and insight that amount almost to the gift of prophecy, and her gallery reveals what a critic recently described as “well-nigh matchless tact of selection.”

This same unerring taste and ready power of decision made her a most valuable member of the committees which sponsored important modern exhibitions of recent years. She was one of the Founders of the Museum of Modern Art and its Vice-President. She had a principal part in its establishment and in the conduct of its activities.

Feeling the unity of all art she turned her sympathetic understanding round the circle and included the theater among her interests. There she adhered more definitely to the classical; the music of the words, the form in which the ideas were presented, and the mass of color made Hamlet and Cyrano to her the most magnificent plays of our language.

In manner she was quiet, somewhat unimpressive, yet always alert and at moments of which she was unconscious one caught the vision of a radiant spirit. Apparently the gentlest, and certainly the most modest of women, she was absolutely independent in her taste and courageous as to her method of doing things. Having an instinctive love of the arts and a finely trained aesthetic perception she wove a pattern of brilliant color into the stereotype background of a conventional life.

Criticism, even ridicule of an artist’s method, or the result achieved had no effect upon her whatever; she smiled confidently at those who had nothing in common with her beliefs and went her serene, cheerful way. Just as a rock at the ocean’s edge meets the pounding of the teasing surf, after each attack the rock emerges unchanged—it is the wave which breaks and leaves the rock gleaming in the sunlight as bright as before.

The new discoveries of pure science attracted her. She read much philosophy, and sought eagerly to understand the essential why and wherefore of life. She questioned, too intellectually honest to accept anything blindly, but all such groping seemed designed not so much to find a faith, as to complete the superstructure upon a simple, and unusually firm foundation of religious conviction already there.

Her outstanding characteristics were simplicity, tolerance and understanding, and the greatest of these was her understanding. Perhaps that is why she had such an attraction for youth. She saw what they saw, encouraged the expression of their ideas and spontaneously offered them unprejudiced consideration. Naturally she did not always agree with these conceptions, her knowledge was too real, her respect for art too sincere, only no twig that had aspiration for its leader was rootless to her—she regarded it as a potential tree. No one ever left her with dampened enthusiasm, but always with a sense of greater self-confidence and a firmer grip on the creative impulse that was his.

She never sought even through criticism to implant her own belief in others. She was as selfless in her opinions as she was in her generosity. The intimate friends were few but her acquaintances were from all walks of life. Blessed with a happy, contented disposition, her problems were the problems of others; her hopes their hopes; her zeal was for their accomplishment, although warmth of enthusiasm never swept her off her feet; with clear, orderly precision she thought things through to a definite conclusion.

She understood that musical talent to develop must have education; that the best plays in the theater should be properly housed as well as the most popular; that the real artists of today will become the great masters of tomorrow, only meanwhile the spirit of artistic creation has a physical body which must be fed and a home provided for its ideas. With great simplicity and generosity she set about the practical business of securing these necessities as far as possible, for the people in whose ideas she believed.

Her devotion to others seemed almost that of self-sacrifice, to her it meant only self-realization. Inspiration is an intangible thing, it is difficult to trace the springs that feed it but undoubtedly such rare understanding and warm, sustaining encouragement as "Lillie" Bliss gave to all her artist friends must have found its way into the very life stream of their creative effort and carried it forward with increasing strength and beauty. By the rare quality of her vision, in her philosophy of life, in everything she did, she proved that there can exist among people of this world a superiority of fine qualities, an aristocracy of character.

Last January she became desperately ill, but with remarkable courage she patiently aided those who fought for her life. At first, to all appearances she had won, for she was up again and showed the same unflagging interest in her friends and their doings; the Persian exhibit in London, the Schubert Memorial, the picture gallery at Phillips Academy, unemployment in New York; finally she even insisted upon going to see the last day of the Lautrec-Redon show at the Modern Museum which greatly pleased her. However, this fictitious strength began to fail rapidly, and on March twelfth she passed over to the Unseen World.

Yet assuredly she lives on for this city of which she was such a distinguished citizen. She lives in the impulse her mind and generous leadership have given to the artistic development of her day. She lives in the beauty of her splendid gift, which definitely founds a Museum of Modern Art. She lives in the inspiration her fine character will be to others. She lives in the heart and memory of those who love her, for as someone has said, "God gave us memory so that we might have roses in December."

MISS BLISS’ COLLECTION

To write impersonally of Miss Bliss’ collection after having known Miss Bliss is very difficult. For those who were her friends something of her gentle and courageous spirit lingers about the paintings which she loved so much and which she left, perhaps reluctantly, in this world.

Although she possessed well-chosen works of earlier and later periods, the most important part of her collection is the magnificent group of French paintings and drawings of the latter half of the 19th Century. Degas, Renoir, Cézanne, Monet, Pissarro, are included and, among a generation slightly younger, Seurat, Toulouse-Lautrec, Gauguin, Redon—almost the entire roster of those pathfinders whose present fame is equalled only by the neglect or contempt which they endured so often when they were alive. Even fifteen years ago Miss Bliss, at that time one of the few American collectors who found their work admirable, received little sympathy for her enthusiasm—but today how amply is her courage vindicated!

Her superb Daumier Laundress, her Renoir Landscape, and powerful Monet Etretat, most of her 19th Century “old masters” as well as her excellent contemporary paintings by Picasso, Derain and Matisse, were in a way a background, a complement, to the work of the two French artists whom she especially admired—Cézanne and Seurat.

Her eleven oils and ten watercolors by Cézanne give an almost complete picture of the work of the artist who has most influenced contemporary painting. His Self-Portrait in a lawyer’s hat (No. 1) painted during the sixties is an excellent example of his crude, rather labored but vigorous early style. The grandeur with which, during his maturity, he could invest even an awkward human figure is demonstrated in the Bather of about 1880 (No. 8). The small interior with the seated figure of the collector, Chocquet (No. 6) is a jewel of the most precious quality in surface and color. The portrait of the artist’s sister (No. 7) and two watercolor studies for “bather” compositions (Nos. 12 and 13), round out a remarkable series of figure paintings.

Outstanding among her five Cézanne still-life paintings are the unfinished but magnificent Apples (No. 11) formerly in the Kelekian collection, and the sombre Oranges (No. 5) which glow like coals in a dark hearth. The early Landscape (No. 2) painted under the influence of Pissarro, the extraordinary Pines and Rocks (No. 9) are supplemented by a half dozen watercolors, among them a study of foliage (No. 21) which conveys as clearly as any work by Cézanne the patience and intensity of his observation and his unfailing sense of color.

After she had completed her group of Cézannes, Miss Bliss turned increasing attention to Seurat, perhaps the last of the great artists of the 19th Century to win general recognition. Unfortunately his meticulous technique and the brief decade of his painting career have made his work extremely rare and recently extremely costly. In spite of these difficulties, Miss Bliss succeeded in adding to her single oil by Seurat what is probably the largest group of Seurat drawings in America. Had she lived she might also have added (as she desired to) the most important of Seurat’s landscapes.

Among the painters of fifty years ago Miss Bliss concentrated upon the two who, to the present generation, most clearly carried on (and in part rediscovered) the classical tradition of European art. But she realized that her collection lacked any work by the most famous romantic painter of the same period, Vincent van Gogh. During the last year of her life she sold paintings which she felt she least needed, saved what she could by sacrifices which only her friends suspected, in order to buy a van Gogh.

Miss Bliss did not neglect American painting, although she felt the superiority of the French. Even excluding her large collection of Davies she owned more paintings by contemporary Americans than by contemporary Frenchmen. Maurice and Charles Prendergast, Walt Kuhn, and Paul Dougherty interested her more than others. But a special place was reserved for Arthur B. Davies whose delicate, somewhat precious vision seems at present to be undervalued by many critics.

Until his death two years ago Davies was Miss Bliss’ constant friend and helped, by his excellent and very advanced taste, to form her collection almost from its very inception. In return Miss Bliss became Davies’ principal patron, purchasing a large number of his works—oils, watercolors and prints. Yet, however much she may have valued his friendship and discerning counsel and however many of his paintings she may have owned, she did not, as is often supposed, exaggerate his artistic importance. At the time of her death three oils by Davies hung on her walls in addition to the small room decorated by Davies murals.

A special element of sadness is added to this Memorial Exhibition of Miss Bliss’ collection. In her old home where she had lived till recently there was no light and no space to hang the paintings properly. Her new apartment had just been completed before the beginning of the fatal illness prevented her and her friends' enjoying the collection under such advantages as it deserved. In a large and perfectly lighted gallery hung her Daumier, her Pines and Rocks (No. 9) and large Still Life (No. 11) by Cézanne, the three paintings which she especially loved, together with the other French oils. A small reception room was devoted to Cézanne watercolors and another to Seurat drawings. Her dining room was decorated with gay panels by the brothers Prendergast. A Toulouse-Lautrec, a Pissarro, and a fine Italian landscape (No. 46) by Davies hung in her living room, and along the corridors were lithographs by Renoir, Redon, Matisse and Davies, woodcuts by Gauguin, etchings by Picasso, and fragments of Coptic and Persian textiles.

Most of these many riches of which Miss Bliss was a generous custodian during her lifetime are now even more generously made the property of the American public. The gratitude and responsibility felt by the Trustees of the Museum of Modern Art, which has received the major portion of Miss Bliss' bequest, have been expressed elsewhere by its President. They are equally shared by the staff of the Museum.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE COLLECTION OF MISS LIZZIE P. BLISS:

By the terms of Miss Bliss' will her collection is to be divided among several private beneficiaries and the following institutions:

THE BROOKLYN MUSEUM
CLEVELAND MUSEUM OF ART
CORCORAN GALLERY OF ART, WASHINGTON
INTERNATIONAL HOUSE, NEW YORK
THE METROPOLITAN MUSEUM OF ART, NEW YORK
THE NATIONAL GALLERY, MILLBANK, LONDON
NEWARK MUSEUM ASSOCIATION
THE ADDISON GALLERY, PHILLIPS ACADEMY, ANDOVER, MASSACHUSETTS
PORTLAND ART ASSOCIATION, PORTLAND, OREGON
RHODE ISLAND SCHOOL OF DESIGN, PROVIDENCE
ROCHESTER MEMORIAL ART GALLERY
ST. PAUL ART INSTITUTE
SAN FRANCISCO ART ASSOCIATION
UTICA PUBLIC LIBRARY

Acknowledgment is made to these institutions for their generous cooperation in permitting the exhibition of many of these paintings. By the terms of Miss Bliss' will the works of art bequeathed to the Museum of Modern Art (and so designated in this catalog) are to be delivered to the Museum within three years of Miss Bliss' death, providing the Trustees of the Estate should be satisfied that the "Museum of Modern Art is sufficiently endowed and in the judgment of said Trustees on a firm financial basis and in the hands of a competent board of trustees." Upon delivery of these works of art to the Museum of Modern Art they are to become the absolute property of the Museum with the exception of three paintings—Pines and Rocks by Cézanne (No. 9 in this catalog); Still Life by Cézanne (No. 11); and The Laundress by Daumier (No. 23). These three paintings are to be delivered to the Museum of Modern Art under the condition that they shall never be sold. Should the Museum of Modern Art not fulfill the conditions of the bequest these paintings shall then become the sole property of The Metropolitan Museum of Art of New York.

The Trustees and Staff wish also to express their appreciation to Mr. Robert G. McIntyre for his assistance in preparing the Davies group; to Dr. Maurice S. Dimand, Associate Curator of Decorative Arts at the Metropolitan Museum, for his assistance in dating the Near Eastern textiles; to an anonymous student for research in connection with the Degas drawings.

CÉZANNE

Cézanne, in many ways the most important influence upon 20th Century painting, is remarkable for his sense of structure, solidity and order obtained through composition and through his researches in modelling by color (as well as by light and shade). His method of color-modelling is well illustrated in his watercolors. Aside from its structural quality the superb decorative beauty of his color is remarkable.

   Lithograph, 14 x 10 1/2 inches. Published in Caricature, April 26, 1832 (No. 78)
   Lent by the Estate
This and the following two lithographs were published between the time of Daumier's conviction and the beginning of his six months' term in the prison of Ste. Pelagie. The caricatures are all of politicians and were drawn for Caricature whose editor, Philipon, was one of the most aggressive radical agitators during the reign of Louis Philippe. It was for a caricature of the king that Daumier was sentenced to prison. Caricature was suppressed in 1835.

DAVIES

Arthur B. Davies was born in 1862 at Utica, New York. In 1878 his family moved to Chicago where he studied at the Academy of Design. In 1880 he traveled to Mexico as a drafting civil engineer. In 1886 he worked in New York. In 1888 he exhibited for the first time in New York at the American Art Association. Was the moving spirit back of the famous "Armory Exhibition" of Modern Art, New York, 1913. He died in Italy in 1928.

An eclectic but sensitive artist, he came at different periods under the influence of Giorgione and the Venetians, El Greco, Blake, Cubism, and Greek vase painting. Almost all his work is informed by a delicate youthful sentiment.

The original is the Virgin's head in the Madonna of the Rocks in the Louvre.
DERAIN

André Derain. Born at Chatou in 1880. Studied for a short time with Eugène Carrière and then came under influence of Signac, van Gogh, Gauguin, and Cézanne. In 1905 allied himself with Vlaminck, Rouault, Dufy, Friesz, and others in the group called les fauves, the wild men. Early Christian mosaics and Gothic sculpture interested him before the war but more recently he has returned to the French tradition of Corot and Courbet.

GUYS

Constantin Guys. Born at Flushing, The Netherlands, in 1802. Brought up as a soldier and served in the cavalry in Greece and Asia Minor. The London Illustrated News sent him to the East in the Crimean War. On his return to Paris he turned his attention to depicting the life of his time. He died in 1892.

Though considered a mere journalistic illustrator during his lifetime, his watercolors are now much admired for their sensitive gradations of tone and their consummate sense of style.
KUHN

Walt Kuhn was born in New York in 1880. He has studied painting in Paris, Munich, Holland, and Italy. He lives in New York.
One of the most vigorous of contemporary American painters, he has turned from a somewhat arbitrary decorative style to a straightforward naturalism in which richness of painted surface plays an important part.

CLAUDE LORRAINE

Claude Gellée (called Claude Lorraine) was born in 1600 at the Château de Champagne near Charmes. Pupil of Tassi in Rome and of Deruet at Nancy. Worked most of his life in Italy and died, 1882, in Rome. With Poussin the greatest 17th Century master of classical landscape. His art is perhaps better seen in his wash drawings than in his more pretentious oils.

MATISSE

Henri Matisse. Born at Le Cateau in 1869. Studied for a short time under Gustave Moreau, in the company of Rouault. Was influenced early in the century by van Gogh, Gauguin, and Marquet. In 1905 became leader of les fauves. His work has been influenced by Cézanne, Coptic textiles, Persian miniatures, children’s drawings, Negro sculpture, and Moroccan frescoes. His more recent style, represented in the exhibition, marks a return to a more respectful attitude toward “nature” while retaining the brilliant decorative pattern of his previous paintings.

PICASSO

Pablo Ruiz Picasso was born in Malaga, Spain, in 1881. In 1900 he came to Paris. Influenced by Toulouse-Lautrec, El Greco, van Gogh, and Steinlen. 1902–1905, Blue Period. 1905–1906, The Rose Period. 1907, influenced by Negro art. 1908, he, with Braque, invented first elementary phase of Cubism. 1917 returned to a more “realistic” style, while continuing to experiment with abstract design. Neo-classic period, about 1920–23. Two periods of this most famous of living artists are here superbly represented: the third stage of Cubism, 1913–15, and the end of his neo-classic period. The etchings were published about 1905, the stencils about 1921.

PISSARRO

Though less vigorous than Monet and less conspicuous, Pissarro now appears the finer artist as well as an important influence upon such varied painters as Cézanne, van Gogh, Gauguin, and Seurat. There is a modesty and taste in his impressionism which is lacking in that of his more famous companion in arms.

REDON

Odilon Redon. Born at Bordeaux, 1840. Early interested in Delacroix. Failed at the École des Beaux-Arts. Entered Atelier Gérôme. 1876, tried architecture and sculpture. 1883, studied lithography and etching with Rudolphe Bresdin. 1879, first published collection of lithographs. 1899, turned to oil, pastel and watercolor. Died, 1916. Redon, whose lithographs are esthetically as important as his paintings and pastels, is the outstanding modern French master of fantastic invention.

RENOIR

Pierre Auguste Renoir was born at Limoges 1841. Worked first as a commercial painter of porcelain and later in an awning factory. Early paintings influenced by Courbet. Made the acquaintance of Monet, Sisley and Bazille. Exhibited first important work, Lise, at Salon of 1868. Exhibited with the Impressionists, 1874. 1880, went to Italy. Died at Cagnes, 1919. Renoir is the foremost modern painter of the vibrant sensuous world of light, color and texture but, like his precursors, Veronese and Rubens, he is also a great master of rich volumetric composition.

ROUSSEAU

Henri Rousseau was born in 1844 at Laval (Mayence), the son of a laborer. Served in Mexico under Maximilian, 1865. After leaving army became customs official. Was self taught and exhibited regularly for thirty-four years at the Salon des Indépendants. Died in 1910 in Paris. His jungle scenes supposedly reflect memories of the Mexican expedition. Rousseau is the archetype of the naïve in modern art, although through long practice his mastery of decorative design developed far beyond the naïve.

SEGONZAC

André Dunoyer de Segonzac was born in Boussy-Saint-Antoine in the Province of Quercy in 1885. Studied with Laurens, Charles Guérin, and Jacques-Émile Blanche. Influenced by Cézanne. In his oils he is the contemporary leader of the sensual, naturalistic tradition of Courbet. He is also among the foremost contemporary masters of watercolor.

SIGNAC
Paul Signac. Born in Paris in 1863. He exhibited first with the Independents and later in the 9th Salon of the Impressionists. He studied the theory of light and with Seurat contributed his researches to develop the so-called pointilliste style, a method of painting based on color division. His watercolors are perhaps more to be admired than his oils.

BYZANTINE PANELS

Both modern painters and collectors have recognized analogies between certain phases of medieval and modern art, especially in departures from realism. These three panels were painted in Greece probably during the 16th or 17th Century.
