*That the Janis collection should find a home at a great museum has long been my hope, and happily the museum of my first love,
The Museum of Modern Art, has graciously accepted it.*

—SIDNEY JANIS

In its size, breadth of taste, considered balance, and immediate availability, the Sidney and Harriet Janis Collection of some hundred paintings and sculptures is one of the great gifts of works of art received by The Museum of Modern Art.

The collection will be discussed and illustrated in a complete catalogue to be issued later under the general editorship of William S. Rubin, Curator of Painting and Sculpture, who first suggested to Mr. Janis that he make his decision in favor of this museum. I wish, meanwhile, to indicate the particular value of these works of art to the Museum and to recall briefly Mr. Janis' relation to it in the early years when both amateur and institution were beginning to form their collections.

Sidney and Harriet Janis' interest in the Museum began in November, 1929, when it first opened with a great exhibition of paintings by Cézanne, Gauguin, Seurat, and van Gogh. A few months later Mr. Janis acquired not the work of a nineteenth-century master but two paintings from the Museum's Paul Klee exhibition, and added a third shortly after. Klee's In the Grass and Actor's Mask are still in the collection, and so are eight other paintings by European artists, all acquired by 1934: a Mondrian selected in the artist's studio in 1932, an early de Chirico, a Dali of 1929—three works by artists then little known in American collections and borrowed gratefully by the Museum for its fifth anniversary exhibition—and five Picassos. Of these, the most imposing by far is Picasso's Painter and Model of 1928, a large work, difficult, indeed formidable; to acquire it in those days was an act of courage.

In the summer of 1935 the Janis collection was shown at the Museum. There was some hesitation on the part of the Museum lest the display of a private collection set an awkward precedent. Mr. Janis handsomely withdrew his name but lent his treasures. There were sixteen paintings: the ten already mentioned as permanent in the collection, others by Klee and Picasso, and in addition works by Gris, Léger, Matisse, and, above all, Rousseau's The Dream. In 1933, the depths of the Depression, the Museum had no purchase funds; but Sidney Janis, with considerable daring, had been able to secure this, probably the greatest of Rousseau's jungle pictures. (Twenty years later, as he had promised long before, he gave the Museum the first chance to buy it. Again funds were inadequate, but Nelson Rockefeller, himself an avid collector, came to the rescue and magnanimously bought The Dream for the Museum on its twenty-fifth anniversary.)

In spite of its excellence the Janis collection was surprisingly little known in New York at the time of its 1935 showing. Nevertheless it was much admired. The following year, without anonymity, the Picasso Painter and Model was borrowed again, this time for Cubism and Abstract Art. Harriet Janis contributed an elaborate analysis of the painting to the catalogue.

About the end of 1933 Sidney Janis joined the Museum's Advisory Committee, a group of young collectors and friends of the Museum, among them Elizabeth Bliss (now Mrs. Bliss Parkinson, President of the Museum), Walter P. Chrysler, Jr., Philip Johnson, Lincoln Kirstein, George L. K. Morris, Nelson Rockefeller, James Johnson Sweeney, John Walker III, and Edward M. M. Warburg. Among other lively achievements, such as raising the Museum's first purchase fund for the collection, the Committee from time to time organized or sponsored exhibitions.

In 1939 Sidney Janis directed the show Contemporary Unknown American Painters, works by eighteen obscure "modern primitives." Two of them soon lost their obscurity, "Anna Maria Robertson Moses, housewife," and "M. Hirshfield, cloak and suit manufacturer." In the preface to the catalogue, Mr. Janis described the series of exhibitions as "the Advisory Committee's laboratory for experiment and research . . . a forum for untried ideas."

Mr. Janis produced another show in 1940 during the Museum's first Picasso exhibition. Using a full-size mounted photograph of Picasso's Seated Man (or Accordionist) of 1911, Mr. Janis submitted one of the artist's most cryptic cubist compositions to an exhaustive analysis of its formal and iconographic elements. He employed over fifty photographic details, linear diagrams with connecting rods, electrically lit color transparencies, but almost no words—a didactic tour de force.

Three years later Mr. Janis used a similar technique in an exhibition of paintings by Morris Hirshfield, the remarkable "modern primitive" whom he had discovered. The exhibition was not admired either by the critics or, indeed, by several Museum Trustees; but Mondrian was ardently enthusiastic. Duchamp and Giacometti were also impressed by Hirshfield's work, and his European reputation remains high.

Hirshfield had an important place in Mr. Janis' first book, They Taught Themselves: American Primitive Painters of the Twentieth Century, and so did John Kane and Patrick Sullivan; all three are well represented in the Janis collection. The Janises spent much time in the Museum library, often sitting side by side while carrying on their researches for this and other publications.

Sidney Janis' scholarly attitude was expressed not only in his books and lectures but also in a number of enterprising exhibitions he presented later on at the art gallery he established in 1948. The Museum was glad to contribute to such shows but was slightly chagrined that a commercial gallery should anticipate by several years both the Museum's Les Fauves and Futurism exhibitions.

Fortunately for the Museum, the greatest Janis exhibition is his own collection, now presented, thirty-three years after its first showing at The Museum of Modern Art, as a magnificent gift from Sidney Janis.

In every private collection one searches, often in vain, for capital works. There are, I believe, at least two such superb paintings in the Janis collection. Picasso's magnificent Painter and Model of 1928 is remarkable for its intensity and complex invention. Perhaps of greater historic consequence is Boccioni's Dynamism of a Soccer Player of 1913; gigantic in scale, furious in energy, it is the culminating painting by the leader of the Italian Futurists. The importance to the Museum of these paintings is obvious. Highly desirable too are many other works of exceptional quality: for instance, two cubist Picassos of 1913 and 1914; Klee's Actor's Mask; a Dali of his best vintage; and a remarkable 1914 Mondrian, subtle in color and quite different from the six later Mondrians in the Janis collection and the ten already in the Museum.

Still other paintings have a special value because they fill gaps in the Museum's collection. None of the four Légers approximates any of the sixteen we already have. The cubist Delaunay was badly needed, and so were the excellent late Herbin, the Dubuffet from the "Corps de Dames" series, Arp's Pre-Adamite Doll, and a late masterpiece by van Doesburg that complements the Museum's two early works by the leader of the Dutch Stijl group.

The Museum buys many paintings by young, or at least little-known, artists in the hope that as time passes the purchases will have seemed wise. Time then passes; some of the artists have indeed proved their worth, and to such a degree that we urgently need their more recent and mature work; but, quite rightly, their prices have often gone up beyond the limits of the Museum's purchase funds. To a remarkable degree the Janis collection has come to our aid. The Museum's Franz Kline was painted in 1950 and was acquired in 1952; one of the Janis Klines was done a decade later. One of our three de Koonings was painted and bought in 1948, and the other two are dated 1952, but the Janis de Koonings were painted in 1958, 1960, and 1961. Six of the best younger Americans—Kelly, Lichtenstein, Marisol, Oldenburg, Segal, and Wesselmann—are represented in the Museum by one or two works each, dated between 1959 and 1962; works by the same six in the Janis collection were completed in 1966 or 1967; and, it may be added, almost all are of exceptional interest and quite different in style. Equally desirable are representative paintings by the Swedish Fahlström, the French Yves Klein, and the American Rosenquist, none of whom was previously represented in our painting collection.

A number of other excellent works may parallel what the Museum already has, but such is the over-all quality and relevance of the Janis collection that what may at first seem superfluous will be valuable in supplying material for study in depth, freshening the Museum galleries with unfamiliar works by familiar artists, and enabling us to make loans to other institutions and to the Museum's traveling exhibitions. Traveling shows, especially those touring abroad, are now starved for material, particularly in the field of recent American painting so richly represented in the Janis collection.

The value to the Museum rests not only in the collection itself, but in the generous conditions made by the donor. He has not asked that his gifts be shown together in special galleries after their first exhibition. Although he will have partial ownership for years to come, Mr. Janis has offered to let the Museum exhibit the works of art in New York and elsewhere in this country and abroad, whenever they are needed. Furthermore, with concern for posterity, Mr. Janis has handsomely agreed that ten years after his death the Museum, after its usual careful deliberation, may sell or exchange certain works in the collection so that new additions may be acquired in the spirit and name of the donor.

The Museum of Modern Art appreciates the magnanimous way in which Mr. Janis has given his collection as much as it welcomes the collection itself.
