FOREWORD

In its Ninth Loan Exhibition the Museum of Modern Art presents the work of thirty American painters and seven sculptors none of whose work has previously been exhibited either in the Museum's Second Exhibition, "Paintings by Nineteen Living Americans," or in its Fifth Exhibition, "46 Painters and Sculptors under 35".

While in a sense supplementary to these two earlier exhibitions it is believed that the present exhibition may even exceed them in interest because it includes not only many of the best-known American painters and sculptors but also several who have hitherto been practically unrecognised in New York.

The Exhibition was selected by a Committee formed by four of the Trustees in conjunction with the two directors. The Museum's policy of choosing artists regardless of school is continued. As a result painters are included who are followers of the Impressionists as well as others who paint in more recent manners.

American sculpture except by younger artists has up till now been somewhat neglected by the Museum. The present Exhibition will therefore be of especial importance to those interested in the work of American sculptors.

It was originally intended to include work by Thomas Benton and Maurice Sterne. Mr. Benton, however, is devoting himself to mural painting and prefers not to exhibit his canvases while Mr. Sterne's recent sculpture is in Italy and could not be secured in time for the present exhibition. It is hoped that their work will be exhibited in the future.
