FOR RELEASE Saturday Afternoon or
Sunday Morning, June 6 or 7, 1936

The Museum of Modern Art, 11 West 53 Street, will open two new exhibitions to the public on Wednesday, June 10, and will retain a condensed version of its current Exhibition of Modern Painters and Sculptors as Illustrators. The new shows will be an Exhibition of Modern Exposition Architecture and an Exhibition of Architecture in Government Housing under the direction of the Museum's Department of Architecture.

The first floor of the Museum is being rebuilt for the Exhibition of Modern Exposition Architecture, which will have a special installation in which living plant material will be used. It will indicate the use of modern architecture in recent World's Fairs and will include material from Sweden, Belgium, Italy, Austria, France, Germany and America.

The entire fourth floor will be devoted to the Exhibition of Architecture in Government Housing, shown in cooperation with the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration and the Suburban Resettlement Division of the Resettlement Administration of the United States Government. Models, enlarged photographs, sketches and plans in this exhibition will have their first public showing at the Museum. The emphasis in the selection is placed on the architectural excellence with which the various problems are solved.

The condensed version of the Exhibition of Modern Painters and Sculptors as Illustrators will retain most of the important items, including the entire French section. It will occupy the second and third floor galleries of the Museum. This exhibition and the Exhibition of Modern Exposition Architecture will remain on view through Sunday, September 6. The Exhibition of Architecture in Government Housing will close Sunday night, July 12.
