CONTENT During the course of his singular directorial career, Vincente Minnelli (1903-86) reconciled his strong allegiance to the Hollywood studio tradition with his own idiosyncratic vision. He was under contract to MGM for twenty-six years, mastering the genres of the musical, the melodrama, and the sophisticated comedy. This major retrospective, presenting the thirty-four feature films Minnelli made between 1943 and 1976, is part of the two-part "American MovieMakers" series, which includes "The Dawn of Sound."

Minnelli came to Hollywood in 1940 from a career on Broadway as a set designer and director of musicals. His signature film style developed out of his inventive use of the Technicolor palette, lushly stylized sets, and fluid camera movement. Although widely known as a master of musicals, including Meet Me in St. Louis (1944), An American in Paris (1951), The Band Wagon (1953), and Gigi (1958), for which he received a best director Oscar, his versatility with other genres has often been ignored. Minnelli also directed a series of successful comedies, including Father of the Bride (1950) and Designing Woman (1957); and melodramas, such as Madame Bovary (1949), The Bad and The Beautiful (1953), and Lust for Life (1956).

As part of this program, the Museum, in collaboration with George Eastman House and Turner Entertainment Co., has completed the preservation of Meet Me in St. Louis from the original Technicolor materials. Turner has additionally cooperated with every aspect of the retrospective.
