

In 2017, I was invited by the Museum of Modern Art's Department of Education to develop a project as part of Artists Experiment, in conjunction with the exhibition Items: Is Fashion Modern? The piece that resulted, An archive of everything worn to MoMA from November 1, 2017, to January 28, 2018 (Everything worn), is a user-generated time capsule of life at the museum and beyond.

To begin developing the project that would become Everything worn, I spent the summer of 2017 going through MoMA's Archives. The more I learned about previous shows at the museum, the more I wanted to get a sense for the people who had visited them. I searched for materials that would describe the visitors who came to MoMA in the 1950s, 60s, 70s, and 80s. I found comprehensive records of every exhibition in the archives, but very little documentation of the visitors who had come to see them.

As part of my research, I sat down with Maria Martin, who for 30 years worked at what came to be known as "Maria's Desk"—the front desk at the 53rd Street entrance to the MoMA. From that vantage point she saw staff members, trustees, celebrities, and artists pass through the museum's doors. She told me she'd see Andy Warhol stand by the coat check just to people-watch.

I wondered: what would Andy Warhol see if he could stand there and look at MoMA visitors today? Further, what could we learn from visitors if they were asked to describe themselves and their companions in their own words? My work has often looked at how people represent themselves, intentionally or not, usually with their clothes, so I decided to create a visitor record via visitor clothing.

Beginning on November 1, 2017, visitors to MoMA were asked to contribute to Everything worn by sending a text message listing the clothes they or their companions were wearing during their visit. Neon yellow sheets of paper prompting people to participate could be found throughout the museum in non-gallery spaces like elevators, volunteer desks, and in bathrooms. Visitors could also use designated kiosks within the museum to contribute. Submitted descriptions were projected at the Museum. They were also posted at everythingworn.moma.org.

I intended for this democratically generated, text-based archive to capture an impression of a specific period of time at the Museum through vernacular descriptions of clothed bodies. I was curious about what people put on their bodies every day, but I was more drawn to what could be gleaned by reading between the lines of these written descriptions, especially when there's no photograph to provide information like age, sex, or background.

The pages that follow, which are now a permanent part of MoMA's Archives, are a response to the gap I found when I began my research. In their entirety, these 4,949 contributions to An archive of everything worn to MoMA from November 1, 2017, to January 28, 2018 tell us a great deal about visitors to the museum during this three-month period—their clothes, but also their beliefs, idiosyncrasies, and priorities.

—Emily Spivack

An archive of everything worn to MoMA from November 1, 2017, to January 28, 2018

Artist Emily Spivack invites you to contribute to this project by sending a text message listing the clothing you or your companions are wearing today to 1 980 222 3228 from your phone or from one of the kiosks.

Your submission may be projected in the Museum and made available online at everythingworn.moma.org.

Upon completion of the project, the compiled submissions will become part of the MoMA Archives, documenting a moment in time at the Museum through the clothing worn here.

I wear my personality. To me, clothing is a way to express my non conformity and my desire to fit in all at once, so I tend to incorporate all those elements in my outfits. Tonight I have on almost all black - a nod to the chic that New York has brought up in me. A black shirt with flared sleeves and a cozy scarf enough to wrap my insecurities. Paired that with my favorite midi gold foil skirt, pleated for miles. On top of that, I am wearing my favorite Gucci marmot belt (a staple) along with my favorite chocolate suede walking boots with heels that make sounds to demand attention. Lastly, the accessories: my black winter parka and my trusted Louis. Different but desiring to fit in.

4:31 PM DEC 21 2017

Cheap Mexican boots from eBay, too-big wranglers that Amy gave me last week which was nice since she still has like 3 pairs of mine from when we dated, a white shirt I got at the flea market then cut and sewed to my liking, a blue wrangler denim coat I bought off a male model at his garage sale in LA (the collar is blue suede!) and devendra's green knit cap that he left in my car last month and I will be ready to return after this trip. I'm getting sick of seeing it on my head.

4:45 PM DEC 21 2017

It is a rather unusually warm day for a late December evening in New York City, so I have dressed accordingly. The marigold sweater I am wearing, courtesy of Acne Studios, is juxtaposed with a pair of evergreen corduroys and Comme des Garçons Converse. I am a bit bundled, as I have decided to wrap my neck in a Irish plaid scarf and light down jacket. Nevertheless, I still have my anatomically correct heart necklace peaking through. What a day at MoMA. -Griffin Claes

7:27 PM JAN 26 2018

I'm wearing the only comfortable sneakers that I have, which are green mesh Nikes. My socks are blue with grey mountains on them. I'm wearing black pants because I had my photo taken the other day and I thought that black would be less weird than the bright blue one I had been wearing. I have red and black boxers on underneath. My t-shirt is blue with yellow text and my long sleeve shirt is grey and super soft, I love it. I have on a black hoodie that is more like a sweater because it buttons up, and is almost like a piece of sweat clothing but the thought of sweat clothing appalls me. Since I'm a layerer I have my new winter coat on top. It's maybe not warm enough but it was less ugly than everything else in the store on the cold day I bought it in a semi-emergency. My hat is Yves Klein blue and was designed by Mary Ping, who is great.

7:40 PM JAN 26 2018

An archive of everything worn to MoMA from November 1, 2017, to January 28, 2018 is part of Artists Experiment, a Department of Education initiative in which contemporary artists and MoMA educators collaborate on innovative, experimental approaches to public engagement. Initiated in 2012, the program brings artists and educators together to explore MoMA's collection and archives, learn about visitors and their experiences, and develop creative ways to engage Museum audiences through the lens of a particular artist's work. These collaborations result in experimental projects that feature public interaction.

Against the backdrop of the exhibition Items: Is Fashion Modern?, Emily Spivack was an ideal collaborator: her work highlights the stories of individuals in contemporary culture, fashion, and history, and she assigns new meaning to everyday objects and experiences. This compendium offers a way to browse visitors' contributions to the installation, which were projected in the Museum throughout the duration of the project. Viewed in their entirety, these responses show the wide interest and participation this project inspired. By its very nature, An archive of everything worn to MoMA from November 1, 2017, to January 28, 2018 was accessible to a range of audiences, and it led visitors to meaningful conversations about self-expression, identity, and personal history.

In addition to this project, Spivack gave an artist's talk and led a series of related workshops.

–The Department of Education

Emily Spivack is an artist, writer, and editor whose work draws from contemporary culture, clothing, history, and our relationship to everyday objects. She is the author of Worn in New York (2017), a contemporary cultural history of New York told through clothing, which is a follow-up to her New York Times best seller Worn Stories (2014) and wornstories.com (2010), collections of stories about clothing and memory.

In her column for T: The New York Times Style Magazine, The Story of a Thing, Spivack interviews cultural figures about objects in their homes that provide insight into their lives.

As part of Artists Experiment at MoMA from 2017-2018, Emily invited visitors to contribute to An archive of everything worn to MoMA from November 1, 2017, to January 28, 2018, a project that has become a permanent part of MoMA's Archives.

Spivack's 2017 off-site installation for the Honolulu Museum of Art, Medium White Tee, was a fulfillment of President Barack Obama's stated fantasy to run a T-shirt shack that sold only medium-sized white tees as a respite from his nonstop decision-making.

From 2007-2014, Emily found stories about clothing from eBay posts for her website Sentimental Value and for gallery exhibitions in Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and Portland.

Spivack created Threaded, the Smithsonian's only blog about the history of clothing. She made howtodresslike.com, an online archive of nearly 1,000 step-by-step instructions culled from wikiHow. She's also analyzed scented t-shirts, documented wardrobe malfunctions, and highlighted sweat stains on clothes.

Spivack has lectured and presented at museums and universities including The Museum of Modern Art, the New Museum, the Institute of Contemporary Art Philadelphia, New York University, Brown University, Bard College, and the Fashion Institute of Technology. She and her work have been featured in The New York Times, New York magazine, The Washington Post, The Wall Street Journal, NPR, Vogue, and Art in America, among other publications.
