A SLIDE FROM...

121 STREET
PROJECT

partially funded by
The Junior Council

29 July, 1999

er 1999

Information on the Junior Council's involvement with the 121st Street Project, and the following information was located in the 1968-1969 Annual Report of the Junior Council under the New Projects Committee report.

The 121 Street Project was a plan presented to the Junior Council by William Williams, an artist who organized a recent exhibition at the Harlem Studio Museum, and whose wall paintings exist at several New York locations. Mr. Williams' plan provided for the transformation of an entire block on 121st Street between First and Second Ave. Williams, who will work with the sculptor Mel Edwards and painter Peter Bradley, is interested in collaborative effort, and the group which has already painted three walls on this block will use funds raised by the Council to create an environment in a vacant lot involving the use of sculpture as well as wall paintings. The Junior Council will act only as dispersing agent for the funds in this project.

Although a specific date for the 121st Street Project was not identified, it seems the project was ongoing, circa 1969/70, and had been implemented prior to its proposal to the Junior Council. It appears that the Council was approached as a fund raising venue for the project. So while the 121st Street Project was not instigated by the Junior Council, it played a role in its successful completion.
