My girlfriend always tells me when we're having sex that she loves my "big cock." My cock is two inches flaccid and maybe four and a half when hard. She has had many partners before me (at least 22, she isn't sure) so I know that the odds of her being with someone who actually has a big cock is very likely. So why does she do this? She has really small tits so the other night when we were fucking I was like "I love your huge tits." And she just gave me this really weird look and was like "baby I don't have any tits." So now I'm fucking confused. Is she just stupid and thinks that I don't know what a big cock is and that when she tells me mine is big that I'll believe her? And how come I'm supposed to go along with it but when I tell her that her small tits are big, we have to pause sex so that she can correct me?

He explained the concept of television to me. The show had actors in it who also appeared in other TV shows and films. The actors had lives that had nothing to do with what happened in the TV shows and films. The actors lived in reality, which was different from the unreality of the TV shows and films. The TV shows and films were scripted by human beings, who also lived in reality, and who wrote stories that were then turned into TV shows and films. Those human beings were writers, like me.

Once purchased, the art can disappear from view for years, even decades. A lot of the art bought at auctions goes to freeports – ultra-secure warehouses for the collections of millionaires and billionaires, ranging from Picassos and gold to vintage Ferraris and fine wine. The freeports, which exist in Switzerland, Luxembourg and Singapore, offer a variety of tax advantages because the goods stored in them are technically in transit. The Economist magazine reported that the freeport near the Geneva airport alone is thought to hold $100 billion (U.S.) of art.

Once inside the freeport, the art can be sold privately and anonymously to other buyers. The art need never leave the warehouse after the private sale is completed.

Further, and as noted, other traditional vehicles for laundering money have become less attractive, thereby driving those who need a mechanism to launder large sums into the arms of the art world.

the Madame X concept is the most recent example of a marketing trope in which divas use real nick- and middle names to thematically signal that they are revealing more sides of themselves than they previously allowed (see: Mariah Carey's Mimi, Janet Jackson's Damita Jo, and Beyoncé's Sasha Fierce). Needless to say, these exercises are rarely illuminating even when the accompanying music is good.

it is streaming where new romcoms have really rediscovered their mojo. It makes sense. When female fans in particular have relentlessly had their taste questioned, why not retreat to the safety of their own homes to watch without fear of ridicule? Streaming plays to all the strengths of romcom success: word-of-mouth buzz, rewatches, movie marathons.
