The Museum of Modern Art, 11 West 53 Street, is sending back to Germany a large architectural model of the famous Bauhaus School in Dessau, Germany. The model, approximately six feet by eight feet by a foot and a half, has been one of the principal exhibits in the Museum's traveling architectural exhibition which has been touring this country for two years, after being on display in the Spring of 1932 in the Museum itself.

The Bauhaus was designed by the noted German architect, Walter Gropius, and the model is being returned to him for an exhibition in England in May. In this country it has visited the following cities: Philadelphia, Hartford, Chicago, Los Angeles, Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Rochester, Cambridge, Worcester, Manchester, Vermont, and Hanover, New Hampshire.

The Bauhaus model is being returned to its owner-architect on the S.S. Deutschland, sailing Wednesday.
