EXHIBITIONS OF CUBISM, FUTURISM, PAINTINGS BY SIX AMERICANS, AND PICASSO BETWEEN THE WARS TO BE SHOWN

Four groupings of works selected from the Museum Collections - cubism, futurism, paintings by 6 Americans and works done by Picasso between the two world wars - will be on view at the Museum of Modern Art, 11 West 53 Street, from August 13 through September 21. The exhibitions have been organized by Dorothy C. Miller, Curator of the Museum Collections, and will occupy galleries on the second and third floors.

CUBIST WORKS

Cubism, the most influential movement in the art of the 20th century, is represented strongly in the collections of the Museum of Modern Art. For the first time these works are being brought together as a special exhibition.

The Museum acquired its first cubist painting, Picasso's Green Still Life, in 1934 through the Lillie P. Bliss Bequest. In the next year, through the generosity of several other donors - this was before the Museum had any purchase funds - two paintings by Gris, Braque's Oval Still Life, Léger's Breakfast and Picasso's Studio were added to the Collection. In the years that followed, the collection of cubist works was gradually increased and strengthened through purchases and gifts. Cubist sculptures by Duchamp-Villon and others were acquired following the historic exhibition of Cubism and Abstract Art held in 1936. Picasso's Demaiselles d'Avignon was acquired in 1938; Léger's Three Women in 1942; La Fresnaye's Conquest of the Air in 1947; and Picasso's Three Musicians in 1949. Other excellent works in a variety of media filled the gaps and rounded out the collection.

The present cubist exhibition occupies 5 galleries and consists of 56 paintings, sculptures, collages and drawings, as well as 24 prints. The show begins with the Demaiselles d'Avignon, considered the first cubist painting. Steps in the early development of cubism and its "analytical" period are illustrated in paintings, sculpture and drawings by Picasso and paintings by Braque. Then follow paintings by Marcel Duchamp, Gris, La Fresnaye and Léger; sculpture by Duchamp-Villon, Archipenko, Lipchitz, Laurens and others, and collages by Braque, Gris and Picasso. The exhibition concludes with 2 cubist masterpieces of 1921, Picasso's Three Musicians and Léger's Three Women. The Collection also contains later cubist works, which are not included in this exhibition. Two important sculptures, Duchamp-Villon's Horse of 1914 and Lipchitz' Man with Guitar of 1915, as well as the Green Still Life by Picasso, are on loan to other museums and cannot be shown at this time.

Five cubist paintings done from 1917 to 1921 by the Americans Davis, Feininger, Spencer, Stella and Weber have been included in the exhibition.

The fifth gallery is devoted to 24 cubist prints from the Museum's Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Print Room, including the work of Braque, Robert Delaunay, Albert Gleizes, Léger, Louis Marcoussis, Picasso and Jacques Villon. These prints have been selected from works done in Paris from 1909 through 1927. Several new acquisitions are included: 3 drypoints by Braque commissioned in 1912 by Daniel Henry Kahnweiler but not published until 1948; a Léger lithograph of 1920; Marcoussis' distinguished portrait of the poet and cubist propagandist Guillaume Apollinaire; Villon's The Mechanic's Workshop (1914), The Chessboard (1920) and an etching and aquatint in color after the painting The Bride (1912) by his brother Marcel Duchamp.

FUTURIST WORKS

The Museum's collection of Italian futurist art was begun in 1948 when the exhibition 20th-Century Italian Art was in preparation. However, several items in the group, including Balla's painting Swifts, and the two Boccioni sculptures, had already been shown in the Museum in 1936 in Cubism and Abstract Art. The first gallery in the present show is devoted to paintings by Balla and Carrà and paintings and drawings by Severini; the second to Boccioni, who is represented by his great painting, The City Rises; the famous striding bronze figure, Unique Forms of Continuity in Space; a second bronze, the Development of a Bottle in Space, and a group of large drawings. There is no comparable concentration of futurist art in any other American museum.

PAINTINGS BY SIX AMERICANS

Three galleries on the third floor are divided among 6 American painters, all of whom are particularly well represented in the Museum Collections. Eleven watercolors by Marin and 5 oils by O'Keeffe are shown; the Museum's own examples are augmented by works from the Alfred Stieglitz collection on extended loan from the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Eleven watercolors by Demuth and 14 gouaches by Graves show both these painters at their best. The exhibition closes on a powerful note of realism with 6 works each by Hopper and Shahn.

PICASSO BETWEEN THE WARS

On the second floor, in the central galleries where certain of the Museum's cubist paintings usually hang, a special show called Picasso Between the Wars, 1919-1939, has been arranged. This exhibition, consisting of 16 paintings, 8 from the Museum Collection and 8 from the group which has been on loan from the artist since the Picasso show in 1939, illustrates the range and variety of Picasso's work during the 1920s and 30s, culminating in 2 monumental canvases, the Guernica mural of 1937 and the Night Fishing at Antibes of 1939.

A complete check list of the exhibition is available on request.
