FIRST FILMS, 1879 - 1901, AT MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

A program of the earliest motion pictures, First Films, 1879 - 1901, will be shown at the Museum of Modern Art, 11 West 53 Street, January 23 - 25; daily screenings at 3 and 5:30. Films by Edison, Lumière and Skladanowsky are included.

First Films will inaugurate Part I of THE FIRST SIXTY YEARS, a retrospective history of the motion picture to be scheduled in interspersed sections between such Museum series as the prospective Zinnemann, Rotha and Dietrich cycles. The entire retrospect will comprise more than 200 programs during a two-year period. Part I, selected shorts and early features from 1879 to the First World War, will continue through March 12, 1958.

In the past few years the Museum Film Library has devoted most of its public screenings to special film cycles (Goldwyn, UPA, French, German, etc.), with limited emphasis on its general collection. Not since 1939, when a retrospective cycle of 300 films launched the auditorium programs, has the Film Library presented a chronological survey based on its collection. Now, with new acquisitions to the collection and with special films borrowed for the occasion, the student, connoisseur and fan will be able to review the whole range of film history during THE FIRST SIXTY YEARS of its growth as the most popular art of the Twentieth Century.

Part I of the survey will trace the development of the film from the earliest experimentation to the time it was accepted as an art form worthy of serious attention. Included will be the first story film (The Great Train Robbery, 1903); the beginnings of the newreel (The Meeting of the King of Italy and the Kaiser, by Comerio, 1908); the first feature film starring a noted stage actress (Camille, with Bernhardt, 1911); the first European spectacle (Quo Vadis, 1912) the first portrayal of the vamp (A Fool There Was, with Theda Bara, 1914); and the documented rise of D. W. Griffith from an apprentice to the leading director of his day. Vachel Lindsay, whose 1915 book of film criticism is still considered one of the most penetrating, based his judgements on such early films. He wrote:

The invention of the photoplay is as great a step as was the beginning of picture-writing in the stone age... The photoplay of the future will be written from the foundations for the films. The soundest actors, photographers, and producers will be those who emphasize the points wherein the photoplay is unique. What is adapted to complete expression in one art generally secures but half expression in another. The supreme photoplay will give us things that have been but half expressed in all other medium allied to it.

It is these foundations and this uniqueness which will be explored in THE FIRST SIXTY YEARS.
