FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT TELEVISION

PROGRAMS AT MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

Two half-hour television films about Frank Lloyd Wright will be shown in the Museum of Modern Art auditorium April 13-15, daily at 2 p.m., and again on succeeding Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays through May 6. Frank Lloyd Wright, produced by Burton Benjamin and Isaac Kleinerman for the CBS series, "The Twentieth Century," was first televised February 18 this year. A survey of Wright's long battle against what he called "America's lust for ugliness," Walter Cronkite is the reporter, with narration by Marshall Flaum and Walter McQuade. Conversation with Frank Lloyd Wright, of the NBC "Wisdom" series, was produced by Ben Park in 1953. Hugh Downs interviews Wright in a discussion of his architectural philosophy and specific building methods.

The program is presented in connection with the Museum's current exhibition of 250 drawings by Wright, on view through May 6. The Wright films are shown in addition to regular afternoon film showings. Admission to Museum galleries, $1 for adults, 25 cents for children under 16, includes the films.
