The International Council of The Museum of Modern Art, at its spring meeting at the Detroit Institute of Arts on Monday, April 27, announced plans to send four major exhibitions abroad and to bring a large painting exhibition to this country from Japan.

About 75 paintings by Robert Motherwell, well-known American artist, will travel in Europe during 1966 as one of a series of one-man shows requested by leading museums abroad, as well as a large show of 60 sculptures and 35 drawings by David Smith, a leading American sculptor. A survey of American painting will be sent to Japan and India next year under the Council's auspices and in June, 1965, a large group show of American sculpture will open at the Musée Rodin in Paris. Modern Sculpture: USA will include work by artists of an earlier generation, such as Lachaise, up to recent work by young men.

Japanese Art Today, an exhibition of almost 100 works assembled to circulate in this country under the Council's auspices, will open at the San Francisco Museum of Art in 1965. This will be the first large-scale exhibition of recent art from Japan to be shown here.

Walter Dowling, former Ambassador to West Germany, is Chairman of the Council which consists of about 125 art patrons and communities leaders from various parts of this country and abroad. Mrs. Bliss Parkinson is President. The Council is a non-profit organization devoted to cultural exchange in the visual arts. In 1957 the Council assumed sponsorship of The Museum of Modern Art's program of exhibitions abroad under which, since 1958, more than 100 shows have been organized and circulated to over 260 communities in nearly 60 countries around the world.
