An exhibition of prints by the Japanese artist, MASUO IKEDA, will open at The Museum of Modern Art on August 10 and will remain on view in the Museum's first floor galleries through September 19. Selected by William S. Lieberman, Curator of the Department of Drawings and Prints, the exhibition consists of 24 prints executed in Tokyo from 1961 through 1965.

In his introduction, Mr. Lieberman says that Ikeda, "like many artists in Europe and the United States who came of age after the war of the forties, is interested in the absurd. Bright humor and satirical comment illuminate his world, but in his fantasies there is also pathos, tenderness and, unexpectedly, violence. His style blends romanticism with expressionism, naiveté with sophistication."

This spirit of fantasy and satire, as well as his choice of graphic media - drypoint - clearly distinguishes his prints from the school of woodcuts which has dominated printmaking in Japan since the war. Ikeda is a master of a highly personal technique which differs from that of any other artist working in itaglio today. He is fundamentally a draughtsman, a printmaker who draws on metal. The rich textures of line are characteristic of drypoint, but the combination of etching and roulette allows velvet fields of color, impossible to achieve in drypoint alone. Ikeda also prints all his work himself, a complete break with the older, collaborative fashion of woodblock printing in Japan.

Of the 24 works in the exhibition, 23 are in color. Most of his work is anecdotal, telling stories which are often autobiographical. The artist believes that "real things can be strange, and so-called common things unfamiliar. What happened yesterday is often much more real than what occurs today."

Twenty-one of the prints were recently acquired by the Museum, gifts of the Felix and Helen Juda Foundation.
Masuo Ikeda was born in Mukden, Manchuria, in 1934 of Japanese parents. He was repatriated to Japan in 1945 and Ikeda attended high school in the Nagano prefecture in central Japan. In 1952 he moved to Tokyo, where he now lives with his wife who is a poet. The Ikedas are currently in New York City, where Mr. Ikeda hopes to work for the next six months before making a short trip to Europe.

The artist has exhibited at the four international print biennials held in Tokyo since 1957, and in 1963 he was included among the Japanese artists whose work was sent to the seventh Biennial of São Paulo. His work was also included in the exhibition of Contemporary Painters and Sculptors as Printmakers held at The Museum of Modern Art last summer. In 1965 he was awarded a prize at the sixth International Biennial in Ljubljana, Yugoslavia.
