FALL CLASSES AT THE ART CENTER OF THE MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

Registration for fall art classes for children and adults at the Art Center of The Museum of Modern Art, 4 West 54th Street, is still under way. Classes meet once a week for a 15-week session and are limited in size.

There are still openings in general classes for children 3 to 18, as well as in special classes in sculpture and drawing. In the adult classes, there are openings in evening and day classes for beginning and advanced painters.

Each of the beginner courses is an introduction to techniques in order to develop personal expression. Fees range between $85 and $100 per 15-week session.

The Art Center, under the direction of Victor D'Amico, will continue classes for children and adults for the fall and spring terms, 1969-70. While the object of the children's classes will be to develop teaching guides and aids for the Children's Art Caravan, a new project undertaken by the Museum and designed to extend the services beyond the Museum, all of the classes held in the past are being offered.

Devoted to creative art education for children, young people and non-professionals, the school has equipment especially designed to meet the needs of both the child and the adult -- the result of years of experimentation. Studios accommodate sculpture, ceramic, and metal work, as well as drawing, painting, and collage.

The Art Center instructors are selected for their ability, preparation, and skill in meeting the needs of a particular age level or teaching a special craft.
