Sachs Galleries for Drawings and Prints and Edward Steichen Photography Center Gallery, and Main Hall. New installation on second and third floor painting galleries by William S. Lieberman, Director, Department of Painting and Sculpture. Newly acquired works by young American artists Jo Baer, Robert Mangold, Donald Kaufman, Ralph Humphrey and Jules Olitski are exhibited on the third floor. (through Jan. 4)

JANUARY OPENINGS

Jan. 26 - GEORGE N. BARNARD. (1819 - 1902). An exhibition of original photographs by
Apr. 5 one of the American pioneers in the field. A representative selection of about twenty-seven prints taken from an exceedingly rare volume acquired by the Department of Photography in trade for a number of duplicate prints in the Museum's collection. The volume from which the photographs come - Photographic Views of Sherman's Campaign - (N.Y. ca. 1866) is an album composed of 61 contact prints made from large glass negatives taken by Barnard himself in the field when - as official photographer of the Chief Engineer's office, Division of the Mississippi - he accompanied General William T. Sherman on his campaigns during the final years of the Civil War. Presumably the photographs were taken during 1864-65 and illustrate "scenes of the occupation of Nashville, the Great Battles around Chattanooga and Lookout Mountain, the Campaign of Atlanta, March to the Sea, and the Great Raid through the Carolinas." The exhibition is being selected and installed by John Szarkowski, Director, Department of Photography. Steichen Galleries. 3rd floor.

(opened Dec. 5)
- Through
Jan. 18 GARRY WINOGRAND: THE ANIMALS. 37 photographs of animals in zoos from the newly published Museum book of the same title. Highly personal and delightfully amusing, the photographs reveal Winogrand's extraordinary mastery of his medium. Steichen Galleries, 3rd floor. (opened Oct. 15)

- Through
Feb. 15 THE GRAPHIC CONSTRUCTIONS OF JOSEF ALBERS. Two series of prints, Graphic Tectonic (1942) and Embossed Linear Constructions (1969) which use mechanically ordered elements. The 1969 series was made by an engineering programmer and hydraulic press fulfilling Albers' wish to "oppose a belief that hand-made is better than machine or tool-made." Selected and installed by Riva Castleman. 1st floor. (opened Dec. 9)
- Through
Feb. 15 A SALUTE TO ALEXANDER CALDER. The third in the continuing series of major exhibitions drawn entirely from the Museum's collection surveying in depth the work of an artist or movement. The range of Calder's development is shown by some 30 sculptures and constructions in wire and wood, stables, mobiles free moving and electrified, as well as drawings, prints, illustrated books and jewelry. Directed by William S. Lieberman, Director, Dept. of Painting and Sculpture, 1st floor. (opened Dec. 22)
- Through
Mar. 8 SPACES. During recent years many artists have been turning away from the traditions of art that prescribe a static object and a passive viewer. Instead they have begun to create environmental situations which envelop the viewer and involve him with the materials of art. Five artists and a collaborative group, who work in diverse styles and a variety of mediums, have been invited to create environments. These will be dismantled after the exhibition period, extending the artists' revolt against the attitude that regards the work of art as an object to be preserved and marketed. Michael Asher, Larry Bell, Dan Flavin, Robert Morris, and Franz Erhard Walther will create environments in the exhibition gallery, and the Pulsa Group - 10 research artists affiliated with Yale University who are deeply involved with electronic technology - will use the Garden for an outdoor project. 1st floor. (opened Dec. 30)
- Through
Mar. 22 ATGET. A sampling of 118 works by the French photographer (1856-1927) selected from the collection of several thousand prints and over one thousand plates acquired by the Museum last year from Berenice Abbott and Julian Levy with the aid of a gift from Shirley C. Burden. The selection represents the rich variety of subjects that Atget covered in the Paris area. The collection is being documented and catalogued by Yolanda Hershey, Archivist in charge of the Atget Collection. John Szarkowski, Director, Dept. of Photography, selected and installed the exhibition. 1st floor, galleries 5 & 6. (opened December 1)
