JOHNS LITHOGRAPHS AT MUSEUM OF MODERN ART

JASPER JOHNS: LITHOGRAPHS, on view at The Museum of Modern Art from December 22, 1970 through March 21, 1971, offers a major survey of a decade of work in this medium by a pivotal artist. The exhibition, which includes work proofs that demonstrate the various possibilities used or discarded by the artist, consists of 70 lithographs drawn from Johns' output in the years 1960-1970. It is directed by Riva Castleman, Associate Curator for Prints and Illustrated Books.

In addition to the technical virtuosity of this internationally known painter, sculptor and printmaker, JASPER JOHNS: LITHOGRAPHS explores the philosophical themes of the artist's work. The viewer, forced into a new awareness of common objects, sees targets, flags, ale cans and coathangers assume a new significance under Johns' vision. According to Miss Castleman, "The 1960 Coat Hanger, another familiar object elevated to an icon, has an emotional value which it retains in different guises in later works. In its bare, unaltered state, it is emptiness. The tension of the thin wire against the densely packed ground introduces an element of frustration. Later, it is unbent and hooked onto objects that set up paradoxes. The wire links objects with unseen presence in Pinion, and eating utensils with breath in Voice."

The theme of change and the passage of time show themselves in such works as Watchman, the portfolio of ten lithographs - O-9, and O through 9. Speaking of the latter, Miss Castleman notes, "Built from line along, the sequential development of the digits catches the eye in a weblike trap. The sensuosity of the curved lines further confuses the mind so that the cognitive game of counting these numbers is fraught with doubts. Here is the element of time - time that progresses or regresses as the numbers grow larger or smaller."

Another favorite theme, incongruity and unstable relationships, is exemplified by Painting with Two Balls and False Start. Playing an intellectual game with the viewer, Johns incorrectly names brush strokes of color in False Start. "Painting with Two Balls," says Miss Castleman, "besides graphically demonstrating the tension (more) of a flat plane rent by the introduction of solid forms, introduced into his prints two important elements, bands of red, yellow and blue (not yet fully developed into symbols) and a crayon delineation that is self-sustaining."

Johns started printmaking in 1960 at Universal Limited Art Editions, the Long Island workshop of Tatyana Grosman. The first years at Universal saw the genesis, among others, of 0-9, Target and Coat Hanger. In 1968, Kenneth Tyler, a practicing artist and master lithographer who recognized that the future of printmaking as an art lay with America's foremost painters and sculptors, invited Johns to his workshop Gemini G.E.L. in Los Angeles. Here Color Numerals came into being. The proofs of Color Numerals show the numerals changing into agents that transform the viewer's color sense.

Since 1960, 130 of Johns' prints have been published. Ninety-one of these have been lithographs. Miss Castleman notes that "Although this would not be considered a prodigious production for a ten-year period, it has been an exceptionally influential one. In the field of print connoisseurship, Johns' have been among the first lithographs by an American to have achieved considerable international renown. His was certainly the most prophetic work during the early period of the revival of lithography in America. Now that we can see in trial, experimental, work, and artist's proofs the concentrated devotion he has given to the medium, we no longer wonder at the pivotal role that Jasper Johns has played in contemporary American printmaking."

Jasper Johns conceived the format for an illustrated catalogue to accompany the exhibition. The text for the catalogue, which is in the form of a tabloid newspaper, was written by Miss Castleman. It will be sold for fifty cents in the Museum's bookstore.
