No, it's not an umbrella, it's a photograph the young woman finds shelter under while drinking tea in The Museum of Modern Art's Penthouse Restaurant, 11 West 53 Street, New York. Made of strips of 16mm film stretched over a metal frame by photographer Catherine Jansen, this is one of the unusual works of art for sale in the Museum's Christmas show of one-of-a-kind photographs and "multiple" sculptures on view in the Penthouse through January 10.

Among the sculptures are a large cushion in the shape of a sardine by the French artist Lalanne and a six-foot tall folding screen by Jim Dine. The show is presented by the Art Lending Service of the Museum and can be seen, along with tea and cocktails, every afternoon. On weekends the public is admitted to the Penthouse all day and lunch is served. Dinner is served in the Penthouse Thursday evenings.
