1935-1985: 50 YEARS OF FILM AT MoMA

Four-Part Exhibition Marks 50th Anniversary of Department of Film

In June 1935, The Museum of Modern Art began an unprecedented program for an art museum: It started to collect and exhibit motion pictures. What was an experiment then has long since become an institution; today, the Department of Film maintains an archive of almost 10,000 films, a year-round exhibition program in two theaters, a circulating film library, a film stills archive with some 4 million photographs, a study center for students and scholars, and a video program.

With the arrival of its 50th anniversary this summer, the Department of Film has occasion to look back and celebrate. Starting June 28, the Department will present a special, four-part exhibition, 50 YEARS OF FILM AT MoMA, running in the Museum's Roy and Niuta Titus Theaters through September 29.

The first section of the series, on view through July 15, is a selection of 16 memorable American films released in 1935. According to Stephen Harvey, the organizer of the exhibition, these films "give a sense of the climate in which the Department of Film was inaugurated. Hollywood faced the mid-Thirties in a renewed spirit of confidence. The technical uncertainties of the early sound period had been surmounted, and the worst of the Depression's impact on the film industry had receded. This program pays tribute to the skill and diversity of Hollywood's output of a half century ago."

Opening the exhibition are George Stevens's poignant study of small-town American life, Alice Adams, and the shimmering film version of A Midsummer Night's Dream, the one movie made in this country by the famed German stage director, Max Reinhardt. Among the other highlights of Films From 1935 will be Leo McCarey's Ruggles of Red Gap; Mutiny on the Bounty, one of the most intelligent epics of its era; The Devil Is a Woman, the final and most resplendent collaboration between Josef von Sternberg and Marlene Dietrich; and Naughty Marietta, which initiated MGM's series of Jeanette MacDonald-Nelson Eddy operettas. In keeping with its tradition of presenting rarely seen films along with acknowledged classics, the Department will also show such works as King Vidor's touching The Wedding Night, starring Gary Cooper and Anna Sten, and Archie Mayo's Bordertown, one of Warner Bros.'s characteristically vital social melodramas, featuring a rare teaming of Paul Muni and Bette Davis.

Subsequent sections of 50 YEARS OF FILM AT MoMA will be a reprise of the first programs organized for public screenings by the Department's founding curator, Iris Barry; a tribute to independent American narrative filmmakers of the 1950s and 60s; and an informal and highly eclectic survey of international cinema over the last decade.

1935-1985: 50 YEARS OF FILM AT MoMA has been organized by Stephen Harvey, assistant curator in the Department of Film, with special assistance by Adrienne Mancia, curator. Jon Gartenberg, assistant curator in the Film Archive, has programmed the salute to American independent film, and Laurence Kardish, curator, has assisted with the survey of international film 1974-1984. The Department of Film would like to thank MCA-Universal, MGM/UA, RKO Pictures, a GenCorp Co., The Samuel Goldwyn Company, 20th Century-Fox, UCLA Film Archives, and the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences for their assistance and co-operation in organizing Films From 1935.
