WYETH  CHRISTINA’S WORLD

LAURA HOPTMAN

THE MUSEUM OF MODERN ART, NEW YORK
When asked by a journalist in 1977 to name the most underrated and overrated artists in the history of art, the art historian Robert Rosenblum chose to submit one name for both categories: Andrew Wyeth. Wyeth, an American realist painter whose life and career spanned the better part of the twentieth century, produced in 1948 one of the most iconic paintings in American art, a desolate Maine landscape with a single figure called Christina’s World. This painting, acquired by The Museum of Modern Art in 1949, would become one of the most recognizable images in the history of American art, along with James Abbott McNeill Whistler’s Arrangement in Grey and Black No. 1 (Portrait of The Artist’s Mother) (1871; FIG. 1), better known as Whistler’s Mother, and Grant Wood’s American Gothic (1930; FIG. 2), a painting of a dour Midwestern farm couple in front of their homestead. Christina’s World has been so widely reproduced that it has become a part of American popular culture, and it has also ignited heated arguments—about America’s self-image, cultural parochialism, and taste—that added a measure of controversy to Wyeth’s career, up to his death in 2009. Although controversies surrounding the role of Wyeth’s work in American postwar art have shaped his artistic legacy, the popularity of the painting endures.

Christina’s World is a modest-sized genre scene, painted in high detail with egg tempera on board. Set in the stark, barren landscape of coastal Maine, it depicts a young woman seen from behind, wearing a pink dress and lying in a mown field. Although she reclines gracefully, her upper torso, propped on her arms, is strangely alert; her silhouette is tense, almost frozen, giving the impression that she is fixed to the ground [FIG. 3]. Stock-still she stares, perhaps with longing, perhaps with fear, at a distant farmhouse and a group of outbuildings, ancient and grayed to harmonize with the dry grass and overcast sky. The scene is familiar, even picturesque, but it is also mysterious: Who is this young woman, vulnerable but also somehow indomitable? What is she staring at, or waiting for? And why is she lying in a field?

FIG. 1. James Abbott McNeill Whistler (American, 1834–1903). Arrangement in Grey and Black No. 1 (The Artist’s Mother). 1871. Oil on canvas, 56 11/16 x 64” (144.3 x 162.5 cm). Musée d’Orsay, Paris

FIG. 2. Grant Wood (American, 1891–1942). American Gothic. 1930. Oil on beaver board, 30 3/4 x 25 1/2” (78 x 65.3 cm). The Art Institute of Chicago. Friends of American Art Collection by the Museum, Wyeth was regularly featured in mainstream large-circulation magazines, such as Time and Life, during the 1950s and ‘60s and was hailed by these publications as America’s most popular artist. In 1959 his Groundhog Day (1959; Fig. 4) was purchased by the Philadelphia Museum of Art for thirty-five thousand dollars, the highest price ever paid by a museum for the work of a living American artist. In 1963 a midcareer retrospective of Wyeth’s work at the Albright-Knox Art Gallery, in Buffalo, New York, attracted nearly 250,000 visitors—roughly half the population of the city. Christina’s World, the show’s centerpiece, provoked outpourings of emotion usually reserved for screen idols. One fan, from South Bend, Indiana, wrote plaintively to the museum, “I would so much like to see Mr. Wyeth’s work. The two reproductions I saw in the paper have shaken me tremendously. I have even priced the railroad fare to your city but I’m afraid I can’t make it. I have nine children, and little time and money to spare.”

Thanks in part to the sale of postcard and poster reproductions, Christina’s World became so familiar that by the early 1960s it was also widely parodied, the lone figure gazing longingly at a distant goal cheerfully co-opted to sell everything from pale ale to air conditioners [Figs. 5 and 6]. A small industry sprang up around its subject, Anna Christina Olson, and her home, the farm in South Cushing, Maine, shown in the painting; after her death, in 1968, the house and

The painting was acquired by The Museum of Modern Art in 1949 for $1,800—a princely sum at the time—from the Macbeth Gallery on Fifty-seventh Street in New York City. Wyeth had exhibited his work there for almost a decade, and from his first solo exhibition, in 1937, he had attracted attention and achieved a good deal of financial success. The purchase of Christina’s World, however, marked the beginning of a vertiginous rise in Wyeth’s career. After its acquisition by the Museum, Wyeth was regularly featured in mainstream large-circulation magazines, such as Time and Life, during the 1950s and ‘60s and was hailed by these publications as America’s most popular artist. In 1959 his Groundhog Day (1959; Fig. 4) was purchased by the Philadelphia Museum of Art for thirty-five thousand dollars, the highest price ever paid by a museum for the work of a living American artist. In 1963 a midcareer retrospective of Wyeth’s work at the Albright-Knox Art Gallery, in Buffalo, New York, attracted nearly 250,000 visitors—roughly half the population of the city. Christina’s World, the show’s centerpiece, provoked outpourings of emotion usually reserved for screen idols. One fan, from South Bend, Indiana, wrote plaintively to the museum, “I would so much like to see Mr. Wyeth’s work. The two reproductions I saw in the paper have shaken me tremendously. I have even priced the railroad fare to your city but I’m afraid I can’t make it. I have nine children, and little time and money to spare.”

Thanks in part to the sale of postcard and poster reproductions, Christina’s World became so familiar that by the early 1960s it was also widely parodied, the lone figure gazing longingly at a distant goal cheerfully co-opted to sell everything from pale ale to air conditioners [Figs. 5 and 6]. A small industry sprang up around its subject, Anna Christina Olson, and her home, the farm in South Cushing, Maine, shown in the painting; after her death, in 1968, the house and

Fig. 4. Andrew Wyeth (American, 1917–2009). Groundhog Day. 1959. Tempera on panel, 313/8 x 321/8" (79.7 x 81.6 cm). Philadelphia Museum of Art. Gift of Henry F. du Pont and Mrs. John Wintersteen

Fig. 5. Cover of Beer & Tavern Chronicle, April 1997

Fig. 6. Advertisement from New York Times Magazine, October 16, 1966 part of the property were purchased by a collector of Wyeth’s work and restored with the intent of creating a Wyeth museum. The Olson House opened to the public in 1971 and was immediately swamped by Wyeth admirers who tramped across the property and plunked themselves down on the lawn Christina-style for a photograph against the famous backdrop. The site attracted so many visitors that the residents of South Cushing strongly protested, and the museum was closed barely a year after it opened. The Olson House reopened in 2000 under the aegis of the Farnsworth Art Museum, in Rockland, Maine, and is now on the National Register of Historic Places.

Wyeth first met Anna Christina Olson and her brother Alvaro in 1939, when she was forty-six years old. He was introduced by Betsy James, the woman who was to become his wife and whose family home was close to the Olson farm.

Christina’s World is the second of four tempera paintings of Christina that Wyeth completed from the time he met the Olsons until the siblings’ deaths [FIG. 7]. He also made numerous drawings and watercolors of brother [FIG. 8], sister, and house during his fifty years of friendship with the family.

A notable element of Wyeth’s practice over his long career was his concentration on an extremely circumscribed number of subjects. In seventy years he painted the landscape, objects, and inhabitants of only two locations, never straying from his own neighborhoods: Chadds Ford, Pennsylvania, the village of his birth, and the area around the coastal village of South Cushing, where he had spent summers since early childhood. In the same way, Wyeth narrowed his focus to topics within these two geographical parameters, making lifelong subjects of families with whom he cultivated lasting relationships. The Olsons and the Kuerners, a German immigrant family in Chadds Ford, and the homes they inhabited and the farms they tended [FIG. 9], became Wyeth’s most frequent inspiration over his and their lifetimes. Wyeth became a fixture in those households (and several others), setting up studios in spare bedrooms and coming and going as he pleased, so that he became a fly-on-the-wall observer and recorder of the families’ daily rituals. He painted Christina Olson and Karl Kuerner numerous times and became a close confidant of both [FIGS. 10–12].

A connoisseur of real-life entertainment before the advent of reality television, Wyeth made himself privy to his subjects’ most private moments; in one painting he depicted two of his Chadds Ford friends sleeping, having come upon them very early one morning as he crept through their house [FIG. 13].

(83.8 x 63.5 cm). Curtis Galleries, Minneapolis
Fig. 9. Andrew Wyeth (American, 1917–2009). Brown Swiss. 1957. Tempera on panel, 30 x 60 1/8” (76.2 x 152.7 cm). Private collection.
Fig. 10. Alvaro and Christina Olson and Andrew Wyeth, date unknown

2. Almost all the literature on Andrew Wyeth begins with the claim that his popularity exceeds that of other artists. Michael Kimmelman, writing Wyeth’s obituary for the New York Times, began with the claim that Wyeth was “one of the most popular . . . artists in the history of American art.”

8. Ibid.

12. Ibid., p. 6.

14. Barr, quoted in Miller, foreword to ibid., p. 5.

20. Larry Rivers’ work was deeply engaged with the history of American realist painting. His best-known painting is a modernist version of Emanuel Leutz’s iconic nineteenth-century masterpiece Washington Crossing the Delaware (1851), completed in 1953. Rivers, quoted in “Andrew Wyeth’s World,” p. 52.

23. The art critic and artist Brian O’Dougherty wrote with great feeling in 1974 about the modernist backlash against Wyeth’s work: “Modern art is urban art. While it accepts the urban view of the landscape . . . it will not accept the rural view, nor is it equipped to read it, or perceive it in anything more than the clichés identified with forms of nationalism troubling to the liberal spirit . . . Thus, Wyeth, the only genuine rural artist of the slightest consequence, is attacked with a violence far beyond the visual etiquette of critical disagreement.” O’Dougherty, quoted in Kimmelman, “Andrew Wyeth, Painter, Dies at 91,” p. 52.

29. The coat he was photographed in was in fact made of less-than-lavish coyote fur.

30. Thomas Hoving, the director of The Metropolitan Museum, New York, from 1967 to 1977, was known for his zeal in bringing general audiences to art museums.

35. Ibid.
FOR FURTHER READING

ON ANDREW WYETH

ON AMERICAN REALISM

Produced by The Department of Publications
The Museum of Modern Art, New York

Edited by Emily Hall
Designed by Miko McGinty and Rita Jules Production by Matthew Pimm
Printed and bound by Oceanic Graphic Printing, Inc., China
Typeset in Ideal Sans
Printed on 157 gsm Gold East Matte Artpaper

© 2012 The Museum of Modern Art, New York
Certain illustrations are covered by claims to copyright noted in the Photograph Credits below. All rights reserved.

Library of Congress Control Number: 2012935388

Published by The Museum of Modern Art
11 West 53 Street
New York, New York 10019-5497
www.moma.org

Distributed in the United States and Canada by ARTBOOK | D.A.P., 155 Sixth Avenue, 2nd floor, New York, New York 10013
www.artbook.com

Distributed outside the United States and Canada by Thames & Hudson Ltd., 181A High Holborn, London WC1V 7QX
www.thamesandhudson.com

Printed in China

PHOTOGRAPH CREDITS
In reproducing the images contained in this publication, the Museum obtained the permission of the rights holders whenever possible. If the Museum could not locate the rights holders, notwithstanding good-faith efforts, it requests that any contact information concerning such rights holders be forwarded so that they may be contacted for future editions.

All works by Andrew Wyeth © 2012 Andrew Wyeth
© Figge Art Museum, successors to the Estate of Nari Word Graham/Licensed by VAGA, New York, NY 4 (right)
© Albertina, Vienna, Inv. 5073.19 © The Art Institute of Chicago, 1930.934.4 (right); Sheldon C. Colfile: 32–33
Thank you for downloading this preview of Wyeth: Christina's World. To continue reading, purchase the book by clicking here.

MoMA publications are available to individual customers in several ways.

MoMA Online
www.MoMAStore.org

MoMA Mail Order
Tel. (toll-free): 800 447 6662
Fax: 212 333 1127

MoMA Stores

The MoMA Design and Book Store
11 West 53 Street, New York, NY 10019
Tel.: 212 708 9400

The MoMA Design Store, SoHo
81 Spring Street, New York, NY 10012
Tel.: 646 613 1367

MoMA Books
The Museum of Modern Art, 2nd Floor

Independent, chain, and online bookstores offer MoMA titles worldwide. Contact your favorite bookstore to inquire about new and recent MoMA titles. If the title you are seeking is unavailable, please inform your bookstore that MoMA titles can be ordered from our trade distributors.

Trade Orders

Most MoMA publications are distributed to the trade in the United States and Canada by ARTBOOK | D.A.P. and outside the United States and Canada by Thames & Hudson, Ltd.

Bookstores, book distributors, and libraries should direct all orders, invoice questions, and title, price, and availability inquiries to:

ARTBOOK | D.A.P.
155 Sixth Avenue, 2nd Floor
New York, NY 10013-1507
Tel.: 800 338 2665
www.artbook.com

Thames & Hudson Distributors, Ltd.
Littlehampton Book Services
Faraday Close, Durnington, Worthing
West Sussex, BN13 2RB
Tel.: +44 (0) 1903 828501
www.thamesandhudson.co.uk